THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

WHO SERVES HIS COUNTRY BEST?

Who serves his country best?
Not he who, for a brief and stormy space,
Leads forth his armies to the fierce affray.
Short is the time of turmoil and unrest,
Long years of peace succeed it and replace:
There is a better way.

Who serves his country best?
Not he who guides her senates in debate,
And makes the laws which are her prop and stay;
Not he who wears the poet's purple vest,
And sings her song of love and grief and fate;
There is a better way.

He serves his country best
Who joins the tide that lifts her nobly on;
For speech has myriad tongues for every day,
And song but one; and law within the breast
Is stronger than the graven law on stone;
There is a better way.

He serves his country best
Who lives pure life, and doeth righteous deed,
And walks straight paths, however others stray,
And leaves his sons as uttermost bequest
A stainless record which all men may read;
This is the better way.

No drop but serves the slowly lifting tide,
No dew but has an errand to some flower,
No smallest star but sheds some helpful ray,
And man by man, each giving to all the rest,
Makes the firm bulwark of the country's power;
There is no better way.

—Susan Coolidge.

4th at Delano.

A Grand Good Time.

Oration by Cornelius Willams,
of St. Paul.

The 4th was celebrated in Delano after the usual manner for which our village has become noted. Every thing passed of smoothly. The programme was carried out with few exceptions. The parade was good, several floats would have done credit to any city, especially that of the West Side Lumber Co. G. P. Shaffer and Hanseman & Kobler. The Albion Band was satisfactory. The Declaration of Independence was read by Charles S. Hawker in fine style. The games were up to the average. The rag-a-muffins away ahead of what we generally see. While the Oration by Dr. Cornelius Williams, of St. Paul, was pronounced by many, the best we ever had. We give it entire:

Only four hundred years ago, a man of the dominant race of men first set feet on this continent. How short a time is that, when you think that three score and ten is the span of a man's lifetime, and that less than six such spans have been run out, and behold! within the period of those six lives a nation has been born to mankind. A nation whose destiny it is to work out the problem of the best form of a government, which shall serve as a model for all other peoples. The world is but little older to-day than on the day that Columbus turned the prow of his caravel toward the far Cathay of his dreams; for the age of the world is not counted by centuries. But the world had been old when this nation came into being; for ten thousand years some form of government had existed among men, and thousands of generations of men had lived, struggled, hoped and passed away before the time of which we have any connected record. These generations have left no trace, no monument of their creation, that tells of aught save grovelling and strife. Crumbling stone and graven metal alike speak only the story of war, conquest, and oppression. Men had lived but to enslave and died for the lust of power. Then in the year of our Lord, 1776, there appeared a new star in the West, to which all eyes were bent. This was the star of a new empire that was to shed its light upon all the dark places of the earth. To bring under its benign guidance, in the fullness of time, every civilized people. At first how faint and uncertain though was the light of that star! The watchers who knelt and prayed in the East scarce dared hope. Could it be this was the long waited star of liberty, and that the dawn of Freedom's glorious day had come? Doubters and scoffers there were and faint hearted, who despaired ere this star had risen above the horizon. Yet the eternal law prevailed, for it was, before men were, and to-day the star of Liberty rides high in the heavens. And now in the course of human events it has come to pass that a nation, born a little more than an hundred years ago is grown to be mighty. That handful of men scattered about the thirteen colonies have multiplied to more than half a hundred million; and the vast savage wilderness, an unknown land, untrodden by the white man, has yielded to his hand, and to-day what was only solitude is quick with the life of the nation of destiny.

More than a thousand miles from the further outposts of those weakling colonies, on the shore of a great inland sea, whose very existence was then only a thing of tradition, and where was primeval jungle, now proudly stands one of the fairest cities of the earth, and thither are come the people of every clime, hurrying to do homage at the shrine of America's greatness. And all this in less than the span of life of two men. Surely there are more influences at work here than commonly appertain to the development of a people. This rapid growth of a new people has not been accomplished without terrible cost. First the long struggle for independence, and then the fight for national existance; and from that fearful day, when the colonies declared themselves free, more than a million lives have been required of this nation in order that that declaration should be maintained. Such is the price which we have paid for Liberty. And this is not yet all:—as a further price for the possession which is ours, inexorable Fate has decreed that a race of men should vanish from the face of the earth. We found them here and they are gone, save a remnant, "and yet a remnant shall be saved."

We are mighty as a factor in the affairs of nations, for not as yet have the ethics of international intercourse become so refined or perfect, but that only the strong arm is respected, and a nation which within a year, if need be, can place in the field an army of three millions of men, can command more than respect wherever she will send her flag.

This army which would represent but one man in twelve of our fighting force would represent more in numbers than all the men, women and children of the colonies, that rose up and defied King George of England. This vast domain of ours stretching from the State of Washington to Florida, and from Maine to California, four thousand miles, with a circumference of nearly 11,000 miles and offering foothold and food in its magnificent 4,000,000 square miles of area, one twelfth of the dry land of the globe, place I say, for 500,000,000 of people. In this estimate I have not included that outpost of ours, which that far seeing statesman, Mr. Seward, has secured for us, on the extreme north-western angle of this continent, only forty miles from Asia, and greater in area than Sweden and Norway combined.

This is the home of the American Republic, and we the people of the U. S. of America are the heirs to whom has descended that magnificent inheritance, wrested at an opportune time from the weak king of a powerful nation, by those patriots and heroes of '76. To-day finds this nation at peace with all the world, and its people skilled in every art and science known to men, foremost in every advance which leads to an addition to the sum of Humane knowledge and happiness. But greater than all this, beyond and above it all, we are a free people: in the possession of the highest form of personal, political and religious liberty known to any people since the world began: This liberty which we enjoy, while it is the most precious part of the grand heritage bought for us with our grandsires, blood, and bequeathed us by them to hold in trust for mankind, is not, I must remind you, a thing of their creation. It is right that on this day of national rejoicing, when the heart of this proud nation is aglow, swelling with justified pride and offering up thanksgiving for the manifold blessings which the posession of that liberty has made possible for it, it is right that we should recognize the agencies which placed the sacred torch of liberty within the reach of our forefathers. Many hundreds of years ago that spark was first kindled and has been fanned and fed by the devotion and life blood of Greek, Roman, Gaul Teuton, Pole, Norse and Saxon alike. This liberty is not sprung into existence a thing of the hour, but has been in process of creation for centuries, Mens' hearts and minds have needed long and toilsome preparation, and much chastening before they were ready for the reception of the spirit of Liberty, but after ages of travail at last the blessed consumation had fallen to the lot of that composit mass, the people of the American colonies, and to mankind has been rendered the boon so long sought, a nation of freemen.

Then and there was the hour and opportunity, and to the brave men of America and the gallant sons of France who fought the seven years fight, and to the whole world, was yielded a Republic whose destiny is manifest. That destiny is the recreation of the forms of government of the nations of the earth, and to-day the motherland of those brave French men, who went with the soldiers of the Revolution, proudly wears the cap of Liberty. The genius of the Republic is the spirit of progress, of development and attainment, and this great land we may look upon as a vast laboratory in which the dwellers thereof shall elaborate a code of laws and system of government that shall be as nearly perfect as humane intellect can conceive and that humane effort may put in operation. It would be vainglorious to maintain that our present system of government and laws leaves nothing to add, we are but in the infancy of development, and it must be admitted that, that great force in national development, and evolution, which may be called the common mind, the sum of the intellect of the whole people, has not kept quite abreast with the advance which has been effected in the dynamics of our material evolution, and the betterment which has come about as the result of the improvement in all kinds of machinery and the consequent more economic application of natural forces, has led to the presentation of problems to the mind which it has not been able to grasp. Disputes have arisen as between the employer and the employed in the course of attempts to solve these problems, in which both sides have been to blame. These disputes involve in their consequence not only the active participants, but the whole people and their interests, and the points which I wish to emphasize are these: The common mind must be competent to the understanding of such problems, and by force of its aid speedily solve them. Ammendments, emmendations and additions to our system of laws must be effected, which shall contain a statement of the problems and their solution. The education of the common mind is to be effected by means of the law of the land and the diffusion of a knowledge of that law rests largely with one of the agents of civilization, and prominent factors in the upbuilding and conversation of the nation; I mean the public Press. To the genius of the Press and to steam transportation, all countries of modern times are deeply in debt. Any country which would be prosperious must foster both the one and the other. It is absolutely essential to a healthful national body that the elements which go to compose it should be homogenous or equivalent to it; that is that every addition to that body should contain the property of being assimilable. If this be not so, contention instead of agreement is the rule, and growth is interfered with: and the measure of retardation of development is in direct ratio to the want of harmony.

Now of all the agents conducive to homogeneousness and unity of aim of a people, first rank must be given to the Press and to Railroads. It is the function of the genius of the Press to educate and form the common mind. 'tis the function of the genius of the Railways to bring together into actual contact the people of the most widely separated parts of the country. And this intimate admixture of the competent parts of the people of a nation is essential to that other condition also necessary to national welfare. That is a common language. These genii then, of the Press and Railways, you must care for, as vital parts of the national body. That a people who would reap the greatest measure of good from association should speak a common language, is I think so evident that to maintain the contrary would be the boldest heresy. It is no less evident to the most careless observer that this same process of amalgamation and assimilation is the universal rule with the people of our country, and the children of the emigrant, from whatever land he may come, is an American with the language of the country, his mother tongue.

There is a peculiar fitness and reasonableness in the proposition that this people shall form the nucleus of conversation of all other peoples into our likeness. Call the long roll of our 64,000,000 of people, and what do you find. You will find representation from every people of the earth, if not from every tribe, and it is significant that the greater of all the alien elements will be found to spring from that people in which the spirit of our institution is most active. That this is no idle fancy, let me ask you to cast your eye over the political situation in Europe. Is it not apparent that the spirit of unrest which pervades nearly every European country has its origin in dissatisfaction with the form of government? or with the method of its administration?

Let me direct your attention to the present crisis in Germany. Here is a bold and manly protest against the spirit of absoluteism at large, and against a particular and personal manifestation of that spirit on the part of the German emperor. Can any one doubt but that the change of the form of government in France was directly influenced or even the direct result of the American Revolution? Is it not as evident that it is the transfusion of the spirit of liberty from this grand Republic of ours, into the life of the people of other lands, which is moving them to an assertion of their claims to higher consideration? Greece, ruled by a King yesterday, to-day takes her place among the Republics of the world. The internal force which impels the flower of the German nation at this time to array itself in opposition to the wishes of the Emperor, is not that they love their ruler less but that they love Liberty more. "Gibt es einen Deutschen der sein Vaterland nicht liebt? Es sprach Freiheit's Seele, aber in Schiller, wenn er sagte.

"Der Mensch ist frei geschaffen, ist frei,
Und wuerd' er in Ketten gaboren,
Laszt euch nicht irren, des Poedels geschrei,
Nicht dem Misbrauch, rasender Thoren!
Vor dem Sklaven, wenn er die Kette bricht,
Vor dem freien Menschen erzittert nicht."

The only divine right which is in accord with the spirit of Liberty is the divine right of a people to be free.

In 1776 Mr. Adams wrote these prophetic words:—"Independence Day will be the most memorable epoch in the history of America. I am apt to believe that it will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival. It ought to be commemorated as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires and illuminations from one end of this continent to the other, from this time forward for evermore.

Now observe the prescience of the man: He wrote "from one end of the continent to the other." Those were days when men weighed well their words. The prophecy as to the celebration has been fulfilled to the letter, not yet as to the extent. To-day from far Alaska and from Minnesota to the great oceans, the stars and stripes float aloft, and the land is given over to rejoicing; but not yet, not yet, from one end of the continent to the other.

The whole world is come to our feast and to-day in the city of Chicago the Liberty flame burns higher and brighter than ever before, since its first kindling.

The discovery of this continent had counted for little in the account of mankind but that it has been dedicated to the holy cause of liberty, as it had been destined to bear and nurture a nation of freemen. The calling together of the people of all lands to witness the evidences of material advancement of the children of our soil, is but a pean of victory to the cause of Liberty,—'tis but a shout of triumph from the throats of that nation of freemen,—'tis but a proclamation of fraternity to the oppressed, and of deliverance that is near. But let us not forget the great strides that have been made toward the complete fulfillment of the prophetic words of the great statesman.

In less than an hundred years we had ... Texas, New Mexico, California and Alaska, and in less time than that the remainder of the second century of our existence as a nation, we will have encompassed every foot of soil which remains of the North American continent, and then, shall the Liberty Bell ring fourth the glad birth peal of the North continental Union of America. From the Arctic to the South Pacific, from the pole to Panama, our flag shall govern and bless, and the process of unification and amalgamation shall be measured by decades instead of centuries. For in those days miracles shall be wrought; entirely conceivable however, and not more wonderful than the world has already seen in the development of the American Union.

Then, if nations shall still maintain armies, what nation or combination of nations could prevail against our might? Not all the other nations of the earth with all the forces which they could muster would be enough to make us afraid.

Not far from where we are standing, geologists tell is the very oldest part of this continent. It is the part which first emerged from the ocean which then covered the land, and it is in the book of destiny that somewhere on this great Divide, about the center of this continent, and likewise near the center of the North Continental Union, shall be builded the new capital of a continental nation.

The future is big with events and discoveries that shall change the relations of countries and peoples to each other. When Jefferson, in 1776, wrote our Declaration of Independence, and when Patrick Henry said "Sink or swim, survive or perish, I am for the Constitution" the world was old, as old as to-day, but no older than it had been for five hundred years preceeding, and yet see how the world has grown in that brief time. For thousands of years there had not been the advance that a single half century now marks! Was it because of inferior intellects then, and superior ones now? That supposition is untenable. The human mind had reached as high a degree of cultivation two thousand years ago as to-day. How then shall we account for the giant strides which now mark the advance of our race?

Some of the finest minds which the world possessed expended their energies in such discussions as, "How many angels can stand on a point of a needle?" and the greatest geniuses of the age sought only to enslave their fellows! But the spirit of Liberty was in the air! and the spirit of Liberty is progress, it is evolution, it is invention, adaptation, it is the substance and essence in many forms of all that which benefits mankind; it is revealed religion, it is the soul of nations. Now you have the answer: it is Liberty which makes those giant strides. Liberty is the genius of all nations who advance. Where Liberty is dead in the hearts of the people, then that people decay.

The incarnation of the spirit of Liberty in the people of the Colonies made those Colonies on the instant a nation, and at once, was that nation quick with the instinct of progress, and from that day to this hour the world has grown in the knowledge of power, and I call you to witness that nearly every feature of that growth has had its birth in this cradle of Liberty. It is that spirit of Liberty which today pervades the brain of its subjects, and which is to bring forth yet greater wonders than the steam engine, or the telegraph, or the telephone; that shall enslave the winds, that shall set at naught the law of gravitation, and that shall bring within the range of our immediate vision, hearing and touch, the sights, sounds, and actual presence of the most distant parts of the earth, and shall permit us at least to look upon the forms of those who live upon other worlds than ours. These things are to be if liberty shall endure. These are not more strange than that which has already come to pass, and these are some of the things which the pregnant future is yet to bear for us.

If Liberty shall endure, we then are heirs to that magnificent heritage, and it is part of the entail that we share our possession with the rest of mankind; not that we shall give up any part or parcel of it; for it is an attribute of Liberty that sharing it does not work a loss of any part of it. Then, my friends, countrymen, brothers, let us judge the future by the past. If Liberty shall endure we shall still go forward; if perhaps in the depths of hell there lurks a power that shall prevail against man's birthright, then is the time of the deliverance of the world not yet begun, and before us in darkness. But may it not be true that the evolution of the creature man is now so far advance that the secret of the Universe is to be opened up to him? May it not be true that revelation is near, and that the great mystery of life shall soon be unveiled? May it not be true that war, pestilence, famine and all ill shall soon vanish, and that Peace, Faith and Liberty shall endure forever. So mote it be.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 30, 1893.

Both ends of the capitol building are in the hands of a small army of workmen who are putting everything in ship-shape for the extra session of Congress. Everything is being overhauled and freshened up or renewed as the exigencies of the case may demand. Although the probability of President Cleveland making an earlier date for the extra session than September is regarded exceedingly slim it was thought best to rush the work at the capitol so that everything would be ready for Congress to assemble as early as the latter part of July in case the president should change his mind.

Speaking of calling the extra session of Congress earlier than September, a gentleman who had a long conversation with the president on the subject says: "The president thinks, and I agree with him, that instead of being a reason for an earlier extra session, the action of the Government of Great Britain in stopping the coinage of silver on private account in India, furnishes one of the strongest reasons against an earlier session. Every one has some sort of an idea of what will be the result of cutting off with a stroke of the pen the market for about one-third of the World's silver, but only time can show precisely what that result will be. If Congress were to be called to meet within three or four weeks it would necessarily lack much information upon this subject which by the middle of September can easily be obtained, information, too, that is, in my opinion, absolutely essential to intelligent and beneficial financial legislation, and any other sort of legislation, would be much worse than none."

Investigation has ... that many men who are drawing disability pensions are living in Soldiers Homes without cost to themselves and are earning regular wages for the performance of manual labor. Further investigation shows that, except in the cases of those who draw pensions under the act of 1890, nothing can be done to prevent a continuance of this practice without new legislation. "It is evident that the whole system of pension laws," remarked a Congressman who was himself a Union soldier, are faulty and in need of a thorough revision, but I have serious doubts as to the courage of Congress to make that revision. Pensions have been used as capital so long by demagogues that the people at large will have to be educated on the subject before the pressure upon Congress becomes strong enough to compel action. The preliminary steps in this educational work are being taken by the administration in its endeavors to clear the roll of illegal pensioners. Later the revision of the laws will come in answer to a public demand in which thousands of old soldiers will join, indeed, many of them have already done so. As soon as pensions are entirely divorced from partisan politics justice will be done, alike to the taxpayer and the old soldier.

Among the fraudulent pensioners whose dropping from the roll was officially approved this week were eleven men shown by the records of the War Department to have been deserters and who are still deserters at large, one man who never was in the army at all, several women who continued to draw widow's pensions after they had married again, and one notorious prostitute. Surely such as these have no business on "a roll of honor."

President Cleveland was asked by the committee in charge of the preparations for the celebration of the centennial of the laying of the corner stone of the U. S Capitol building to deliver the principal oration upon that occasion, but as the President expects to have his hands full about the date of the celebration—September 18—he told the committee that he could not comply with their request but would gladly make a short speech introducing the man they had selected to deliver the oration.

Today closes the fiscal year, and while the financial condition of the Government is not all that could be asked for it is very much better than there was any good reason six months ago, for expecting that it would be at this time. In fact there was abundant reasons six months ago for the fear that, instead of the comfortable cash balance on hand, the administration would have to begin the new year with a deficit.

The date of President Cleveland's departure is still doubtful, owing to the pressure of important public business. Senator Camden wants him to join him in a fishing excursion in West Virginia before he goes to Gray Gables, but it is not certain that he will be able to do so.

AN epidemic of fatal somnambulism seems to be one of the phenomena of the summer. Cases are reported from all over the country of persons walking in sleep out of open doors and open windows, and nearly always losing life in consequence or being grieviously injured. Screens or bars would save many an unfortunate who has thus fallen a victim to a curious disease for which science has found no remedy and scarcely an explanation. Six cases of this nature, four of them fatal, were reported in Chicago in a week.

A GERMAN publishing firm has recently shown itself to be quite abreast of the latest notion in advertising and also not to be wholly deficient in a knowledge of woman nature. After putting a novel on the market they had printed in the leading newspapers a notice to the effect that a certain nobleman of wealth and position wanted a wife who should resemble the heroine in this story, whereupon every marriageable woman who saw the notice bought the book to see what the woman was like, and the work had an immense sale.

THE problem of silent machinery running appears to have been brought a step nearer solution by the introduction in Austria of cog-wheels made of pressed raw hide, which are to work in conjunction with wheels of cast iron, steel and other metals. The new wheels possess great strength. They do not require lubricating and are, therefore, clean in operation. They can be had ready made or in the form of raw hide disks for shaping by the purchaser. They are supported by a wooden framework, and after being cut the wheel is covered with a shellac solution.

THE effect good roads have upon the social life of a community is illustrated by the conditions prevailing in the broad level area of Delaware and the eastern shore of Maryland, lying immediately below the foothill region that borders Pennsylvania. The tract is a fine farming region, inhabited by a prosperous people who have dwelt long in the land. The young folks of one state think nothing of a ten or fifteen mile drive across country to dance in the other. Every man knows not only his neighbors of the same village or county, but half the inhabitants of bordering counties in the other state.

A BOY playing with a toy pistol in a barn at Gibson, N. B., started a fire that burned eighty dwellings, two churches, the Canadian Pacific railway station and two public halls, leaving one hundred and twenty-five families homeless. This is a good object lesson in these days when a man deliberately buys a pistol and gives it to his son, "dear little Johnnie," that he may amuse himself. That Johnnie doesn't fail to amuse himself is evident by the above statement. Yet few will deny that it is rather costly amusement. It will be continued so long as parents give their children all the guns, powder and matches they call for.

MANY HAVE PERISHED.

Awful Result of the Breaking of a Levee in Louisiana.

NEW ORLEANS, July 3.—Suddenly and almost without warning the relentless waters pouring through the Rescue crevasse, now 800 feet wide, swept down the New river basin Tuesday night, carrying destruction and terror in their path, not only imprisoning the unfortunate people in their houses and cabins, but driving them into the garrets, and in many instances to the roofs of the buildings. There many of them are yet huddled, enduring the pangs of hunger, for they have no means of cooking food; and it will be fortunate, indeed, if all are succored before starvation and exposure find victims among them.

In addition to those already overwhelmed and drowned in the flood, so far as reported up to this evening, ten lives have been lost; a white girl, three colored men—Reed Saul, Tom Jones and the latter's father—one colored woman, mother of Tom Jones, and five colored children whose names have not been learned. The white girl was brought in a skiff to the head of New river lane and just after stepping from the boat to the railroad embankment she fell to the ground and died, doubtless from the combined effects of fright and exposure, nervous and physical exhaustion.

Presuming that the water would rise gradually, as has been the case in former seasons of inundation and that they would have a week or more in which to remove their families, stock and household belongings, a large majority of the people of this unfortunate section had made no preparations whatever for the terrible visitation that came upon them in a single night. An idea of the extent and depth of the flood may be formed from the fact that there is from 5 to 7 feet of water at Dutchtown.

The first news of the fearful condition of affairs on New river to reach Donaldsonville came Thursday night in a letter sent by a special messenger from R. T. Hart, of Donaldsonville, to the editor of the Chief, and Mr. Hart's information was derived from Leufroy Boudreaux, one of the oldest and most respected citizens of the overflowed country, who had, with much difficulty, made his way to the river in search of means to rescue his family and neighbors from their alarming predicament.

Measures of relief were at once instituted. It is thought the two fleet of skiffs sent, added to the considerable number previously in the overflow, or gathered from other points, will be sufficient to accomplish the work of bringing all the people of that flooded section to places of safety.

MARKHAM REPORTS.

His Statement Places the Blame of the Victoria's Loss on Sir George Tryon.

LONDON, July 3.—A midshipman from the Victoria arrived at Calais early Sunday morning with Rear Admiral Markham's dispatches concerning the collision off Tripoli. Markham's report, like the unofficial stories that have been received, place the blame of the awful blunder on Sir George Tryon. He says that when the Victoria signalled for the fatal maneuver he did not think it possible to, with safety, execute the evolution, as the two columns were only 16 cable lengths apart. He directed the flag lieutenant to keep the signal, which the Camperdown was repeating, at dip as an indication that the signal from the Victoria was not understood. He then directed him to signal with th semaphore: "Do I understand it is your wish for the columns to turn as indicated by the signal now flying?" But before his order could be carried out the commander in chief semaphored him to know what he was waiting for. He then proceeded to carry out the order, making every effort to prevent a collision, without success. After the ships had collided Sir George signaled that no boats were needed from the other vessels, but a few minutes later the Victoria sank. The time that elapsed between the occurrence of the collision and the sinking of the Victoria was about thirteen minutes. Twenty-two officers and 336 men were drowned.

TO FALLEN HEROES.

The New York Monument Dedicated on the Gettysburg Battle Field.

GETTYSBURG, Pa., July 3.—New York state's handsome monument to the heroes who fell in the decisive Gettysburg fight was dedicated Sunday. Seven thousand New York veterans, the governors of two states, the surviving generals of the battle and thousands of veterans and visitors from other states were present to lend impressiveness to the scene. Rev. O. W. Severson, of the One Hundred and Thirty-seventh New York volunteers, opened the proceedings of the morning with prayer. The veterans then sang "America." Gen. Avery then introduced Maj. Gen. Henry W. Slocum, who made an eloquent address. He was followed by Gen. Greene and Gov. Flower. In the afternoon Gen. Sickles, as president of the board of Gettysburg monument commissioners of New York state, delivered the introductory address. Bishop Potter was then introduced and delivered the dedication address. Gov. Pattison and Gov. Flower then spoke, a poem was read, and then the cannon thundered their salute to the monument and to the memory of the dead, and while smoke hovered over the wheat valleys the crowd dispersed.

YIELD OF THE FIELDS.

Interesting Reports Regarding Crop Prospects—Wheat Will Be Below the Average—An Immense Yield of Corn Promised—Fruit a Failure.

NEW YORK, July 3.—The World publishes a detailed report of the condition July 1 of the crops in the western and northwestern states, the Pacific slope, Canada and Manitoba. This report was obtained by telegraph Saturday from correspondents in nearly 700 cities, towns and villages scattered over the great wheat and corn growing districts. The reports cover fully the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Texas, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota. Of the 435,949,000 bushels of wheat in the crop of 1892, government report, these states produced over 390,000,000 bushels. They produced practically all the corn crop. In addition good general reports have been obtained from the Pacific slope, which last year produced about 60,000,000 bushels of wheat, and from Canada, Manitoba, the northwest territories and British Columbia, whose yield constitutes another important factor in the wheat market.

The reports show:

1. That the wheat crop will be much below the average.
2. That the corn crop will be enormous, and if weather conditions continue good will probably be the largest ever raised.
3. That the acreage of oats, barley, rye and similar grains has increased and that the crop will be large.
4. That the hay crop is everywhere about the average.
5. That the fruit crop is generally poor, and in many cases a total failure.
6. That the general condition of the agricultural section is excellent, the outlook promising and the farmers cheerful and hopeful.

The partial failure of the wheat crop has been foreseen. It is due chiefly to unfavorable weather last winter. The heaviest damage is in Kansas, where in nearly thirty counties the crop is a total failure. The state's yield has been, it is alleged, only 40 per cent. of an average. This means a reduction of over 40,000,000 bushels in the crop of that state alone, for Kansas is the greatest wheat country in the world. Its production last year was over 70,000,000 bushels. Illinois and Missouri wheat also suffered heavily from the same cause.

Spring wheat has been greatly damaged in North Dakota and other sections by drought. This has been broken within a day or two and the outlook is improving. Another element in the reduction of the wheat crop is the decreased acreage, due to farmers abandoning its culture on account of low prices and putting in barley, oats and other grains instead.

There has been much doubt about the corn crop, owing to the reports of unfavorable weather and damage by insects, but the reports indicate that the crop is now finally out of danger and promises to be an immense one. From every section there comes the most enthusiastic reports on this subject. The only danger to it is the improbable one of a long continued spell of generally unfavorable weather. This is the first report that has been made on the corn crop, the latest government report issued not covering it.

Oats promise more than an average crop with increased acreage. They share with corn the enthusiastic admiration of the rural correspondents.

Barley seems to have been planted more freely than usual, taking the place of wheat in many localities, and the yield promises well

Rye cuts a small figure in the grain market, but the crop will be good.

Clover and timothy, which form the bulk of the vast hay crop of the country, are almost uniformly reported to have made first-class crops. This may have more widespread importance than will at first appear should the drought abroad continue and the exporting of hay, already begun, increase to any great extent. Other grasses have done well, and pasturing is generally reported good.

General disaster seems to have come to the fruit crop through the central and southern west. Apples especially are a failure. Bad weather in the blooming season damaged the buds, and even where fruit formed it is now dropping from the trees.

Tobacco in Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee promises an average crop.

Potatoes vary greatly in different states, but the prospect is for a smaller crop than usual. Other root crops are doing well.

British Columbia, in addition to good wheat prospects, reports a glorious outlook for salmon and seal crops.

With such prospects of an abundant harvest at home it is important to look abroad for information as to whether there will be a market for our surplus or whether farmers are simply to get lower prices per bushel for the greater number of bushels in their product.

The outlook there is, from an American business point of view, most encouraging. From every country, except Russia, come reports of drought and disaster to the crops. Wheat harvesting has begun in south Germany, Austria and Hungary and everywhere, except along the Danube and in southern Hungary the crop is reported damaged by drought. The official statistics in Russia show that in no instance can crops be classified as good. Russia is discouraging wheat exports, so that the good crop there will do less than might be expected to relieve the deficiency in the rest of Europe.

Will of the Late A. J. Drexel.

PHILADELPHIA, July 3.—The late A. J. Drexel's will, drawn ten years ago, but with numerous codicils since, will not be read until one week after his funeral. The estate will amount to over $30,000,000. The will directs a reorganization of all three partnerships in the great banking firms on the first day of January succeeding Mr. Drexel's death and establishes the amount of interest the estate is to hold in them hereafter. Both Drexel institute and the Childs-Drexel home for union printers are remembered and a good deal of money is given outright to charities.

Capitol Sites.

The capitol commission met and opened bids for the new capitol site. Four sites were offered. The bids were:

W. F. Mason offered the greater part of the south half of the block immediately north of the present capitol for $175,000. From informal inquiry the board learned that the remainder of the block could be secured for $225,000, making the cost of the entire block $400,000.

A tract of over nine acres, bounded by University and Park avenues, and Wabasha and Cedar streets, was offered for $480,000. Not all the tract was offered in the bid, but the board obtained figures which made the cost of the whole tract $480,000.

The Bass Hill tract, comprising about seven acres at the head of Jackson street, was offered for $132,000.

William Dawson offered the William Lindeke estate and the Uri L. Lamphrey property, comprising the block immediately north of Central park, for $342,000.

The commission visited the sites offered. The conclusion arrived at was that the prices asked were 25 per cent higher than their present value. It is understood that this is owing to the fact that there will not be any money available for the payment of the property purchased until way into 1887.

The commission appointed a committee to ascertain the cost of grading the sites offered and then adjourned.

Murder.

Thomas Rich was shot and killed at Winona by Jack Murphy. The trouble began at a disreputable house, where Rich found Murphy and another man. Rich offered to lick the two of them, but backed out when a six-shooter gleamed before him. However, Rich was determined to get the better of his antagonists, and got out a warrant for the arrest of the two men on the charge of assault. Court Officer Thomas Flannery served the warrant. Murphy was found in the Mississippi house and taken into custody by the officer and Rich, but though grappled by both, he managed to extricate a revolver from his pocket and shot Rich in the left side. Murphy's accomplice heard the report and rushed into the office and persuaded the officer by means of a revolver to relax his hold on Murphy and leave the hotel. Both escaped.

Binding Twine.

The sale of binding twine at the prison factory has virtually begun in earnest, a full carload, together with a number of small orders, being shipped in one day recently. The car was consigned to a Mr. Meighan, in Fillmore county. Warden Wolfer, in speaking of the twine output for the season, said that there is now nearly 2,000,000 pounds on hand, and that he was almost certain that the entire product would be sold. Thousands of samples have been sent to the farmers of this state, and many have already ordered twine for future shipment.

The Text Books.

The attorney general has rendered an important opinion at the request of State Superintendent Kiehle. It is to the effect that boards of trustees have authority to provide for introducing free text books into their districts, even though the people at school elections vote against the measure. If the people fail to vote funds for that purpose, the trustees may, under the general statutes, levy a tax to provide the books. Also that boards of trustees may contract with publishers at lower prices than those filed with the superintendent of public instruction.

No Chautauqua.

The annual Chautauqua assembly at Waseca will not be held this year. The world's fair and the breaking down of the auditorium by the heavy snow storms of the past winter are given as reasons for not convening. Next year an auditorium will be built at a cost of $5,000, and Waseca will then be the center of the University extension lectures.

Latest reports received at the navy department from Philadelphia indicate that the cruiser Minneapolis will not be completed much before September. She is little more than half completed. Very little work has been done on this cruiser since early in the spring. It is probable that christening ceremonies will not take place until late in the fall.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime, and read the Label.

THROUGH THE WHEAT.

When she came tripping through the wheat
It seemed to bend to kiss her feet,
And roses all the sod made sweet
And birds sang cheery;

The honey bees were humming low—
Gold specs on roses white as snow,
Sweet roses—not so sweet, I know,
As she was—Mary!

Her footstep seemed to wake a sound
Of tinkling music from the ground
That thrilled the winds that whistled round
With sweet caresses,

And on her forehead, white and sleek,
The rarest blossoms fell to wreak
Their love, and played at hide and seek
In her gold tresses.

Down fell the scythe upon the grass,
And: "Mary, Mary, will you pass?"
You're in my way," she said. "Alas!
I must be going!"

'Not till you pay the forfeit sweet
Of coming this way through the wheat,
Ah! Mary—lips were made to meet—
A kiss you're owing!"

Up went the dainty finger tips,
To shield the rich and rosy lips,
And all their red was in eclipse—
My luck seemed missing.

A moment only!—then, as she
Fled like a shaft of light from me
She cried: "I paid no forfeit—see?
You did the kissing!"

EXCITING EXPERIENCE.

Swaying in a Bucket Four Hundred Feet Above the Earth.

In Denver it was recently reported that the Smuggler mine, of Telluride, Col., would close down, owing to the low price of silver. This being one of the largest producing mines of the state, the natural inference was that many of the men employed therein would leave the country. In behalf of my company (the Rock Island) I started for Telluride, on the Rio Grande Southern railway, and arrived at my destination Wednesday evening. Mr. N. T. Mansfield, manager of the Smuggler, in his cozy little office that night, told me the company had decided upon a reduction of wages instead of closing down, and that word had been sent to the mine that day, but the men's answer had not yet been received. He further told me that at this season of the year there was but one way to get to the mine, and that was by taking the bucket tramway, as the trail was covered with snow and ice and practically impassible. The bucket tram, he added, was itself far from a desirable method of transportation and liable to try a man's nerve pretty well, but if I would undertake the trip he would accompany me.

What could a man say to proposition of that kind but "Yes?" Accordingly, bright and early the next morning, which was one of the fairest and beautiful I have ever seen in the mountains, horses were in readiness and, accompanied by Mr. W. C. Green, who is connected with the San Miguel Mining company of Telluride, we started out. The ride of two miles to Pandora was most enjoyable, by reason of the fording of innumerable streams which crossed the road. Our horses displayed wonderful sagacity in picking their way through many a treacherous spot.

Arriving at the foot of the tram and getting a faint idea of what was ahead of me, seeing the buckets coming down hundreds of feet above us and discharging their cargoes of ore into the immense shute, my courage almost failed me, but it required more nerve than I could muster to back out. I tried to appear as little disconcerted as possible, while Mr. Mansfield, who was to start first, curled up in his little bucket, which was only large enough to hold an ordinary-sized man in a most uncomfortable and cramped position. The endless cable was then put in motion and out swung the manager on his perilous journey. I cannot help thinking how much more nerve he displayed than either Mr. Green or I, but he had been over it before, and knew what was ahead of him. Three hundred feet behind Mr. Mansfield's bucket came another, and into this climbed Mr. Green. As his bucket started up that incline I felt that I had lost my last friend, as there was absolutely nothing left then between me and comfort but disgrace.

The men in attendance I saw were watching me, as I was the first "tenderfoot" who had ever undertaken the trip. Once more assuming a courage I felt not, I awaited my bucket smilingly. When it came along I was obliged to remove my overcoat in order to get in. Crouching down in a sitting posture, tailor fashion, there was just room to stay in and that was all, and with a parting injunction to "keep my tail up" the man in charge switched me on to the main line and I swung out of the doorway fifty feet above the ground.

The rate of speed was about two and a half miles per hour, and the total length of the tram five thousand four hundred feet—a little over a mile. In that mile, however, we had to rise one thousand eight hundred and twenty feet—a little more than one foot in three. The endless cable to which the buckets are attached passes over numerous tall wooden trestles, varying in height from fifty feet to one hundred and sixty, and placed at irregular intervals wherever the formations of the mountain will permit. The height of the cable above the ground increased with every turn of the wheel, and as I sat there with eyes glued upon the two preceding buckets and not particularly anxious in the first few minutes to look down or around or anywhere else except above me, I began to realize that the twenty minutes necessary for the journey were going to be mighty long ones.

On and on we went and up and up until there came in sight yawning under me a terrible gorge, crossed by a single span of the cable over 1,400 feet in length and 400 feet above the ground. Even this would not be so bad were it not that the next tower in front of me was 350 feet higher than the spot from which I was getting my first view.

There ahead of me were the two buckets containing Mansfield and Green, and as I pulled myself together, determined to take every advantage of the glorious view which now opened up, the thought came to me that never had I been in a position of such utter helplessness and dependence. Lest the figures given above should fail to convey the exact idea, let me suggest a comparison which occurred to me while crossing this span.

The Pulitzer building in New York is just about one mile from the Battery, and the height from the ground to the foot of the flag-staff is, if my memory serves, 330 feet. Now pile six Pulitzer buildings one atop the other and start from the battery in a little bucket, smaller than an ordinary clothes-hamper, and go to the top of that mass suspended on a single rope, and if you as a man will not recognize your insignificance nothing will ever bring you to that realizing sense.

By this time I had entered into the full grandeur of the scene and all nervousness disappeared, strange to say, right at the most dangerous part of the journey. Four hundred feet below me I could see a train of those most abused and yet invaluable little burros slowly and painfully climbing the narrow trail laden with supplies and timbers for a neighboring mine. Two miles down the valley lay Telluride, looking like a child's plaything, and still further away miles and miles of dazzling mountain peaks against the blue sky of Colorado—bluer than Italy ever dreamed of, and about me the most unique and picturesque colorings peeping out from the uncovered patches of the mountains.

The day was absolutely perfect, the sun warm, and, despite the constant danger of loaded buckets breaking away and dashing all of us to the abyss below and heedless of the possibility of many things which might happen, I thoroughly enjoyed this wonderful view. I am free to confess, however, to a feeling as though an intense strain had been removed when I finally crossed that gigantic tower and found myself only a hundred feet or so from terra firma, and only then did I discover that my hands had been clutched on that bucket with a deathlike grip and were wet with perspiration, while with my feet I had been exerting a tremendous pressure against the front end.

We soon came in sight of the upper terminal, and upon arrival there I found the men had decided to remain, accepting the slight reduction, and there would be no party to reward me for my trip—if indeed any reward other than the trip itself were necessary. Let me add, however, that the mouth of the mine was still a mile and a half further up the mountain, and that the ore is brought from the mine to the top of the tram by burros, each carrying two sacks weighing one hundred and twenty-five pounds each. Well, my mission being fruitless, we reentered our buckets on the down trip. I feel perfectly sure that had the order been reversed and the down trip come first I would have backed out at any cost, but my up-journey gave me confidence, and it was with considerable equanimity that I gazed down to the tiny terminal two thousand feet below.

As Mr. Green entered his bucket I remarked to the man who fastened it in place: "Get that good and tight, my boy."

He answered: "I am a thousand times more anxious about this thing than you, and will not breathe freely till you're down."

I then learned from him that since he opened the tram twenty-five thousand buckets had passed a given point, with only three runaways. I did not then go into the detail of the damage done, but climbed into my bucket once more, figuring the number of times three goes into twenty-five thousand. Arriving at the high tower again, and entering upon the fourteen-hundred-foot span, a horrible swaying of the bucket commenced, and finally it came to dead stop right at the worst place on the line. The stoppage was but momentary, and was done purposely to give me the full benefit.

There, on the same span, were the tiny buckets, with two other boys, and the thought came to me of the horrible results of a runaway at that particular time, for, while the first bucket containing Mansfield was but six hundred feet ahead, it was at the same time over two hundred feet below me, and I could just see him waving his hand to me by peering over the front end of my cab. Well, we reached the ground again safely, and then looking back once more I fully understood where we had been and wondered at the foolhardiness of it all, but I wouldn't take a great deal for the experience, just the same.—D. J. Flynn. in N. Y. Railroad Men.

THE MOON'S FAULT.

He Was Guided by the Almanac and Not by the Weather.

In a small Vermont town the street lamps, which are few and far between, are under the charge of one of the oldest residents of the place. "Why in the world weren't the lamps lighted to-night, Mr. Jacobs?" inquired a summer resident, who had stumbled down to the post office one July evening in the pitchy darkness of a heavy rainstorm.

"They ain't ever lighted on moonlight nights," responded the old man calmly. "That's the rule, and the moon fulled last night, an' this is one of the best nights in the hull month."

"Best nights!" echoed the other, in considerable irritation. "What good does the moon do in a pouring rain like this?"

"I can't help that," said Mr. Jacobs. "Accordin' to the almanac this is a moonshine night an' the lamps have no call to be lit. I rec'on the almanac's a good thing to go by.

"Why," continued the old lamplighter, surveying his critic with sudden awakened surprise and disgust, "where d'you s'spose I sh'd fetch up ef I was t'go by the weather stid o' the almanac? I persume t'say likely I might hev t'go my round ev'ry night fer a month in dog days. I don't cal'late to hev no sech works as that! Ef the moon don't do her duty it's unfort'nit, but it ain't eny o' my lookaout."

The by-standers murmured assent, and the summer resident was silenced. —Youth's Companion.

HAD HIS MONEY'S WORTH.

This Man Took Catsup, Horse Radish and Pickles with His Cakes.

"It is curious," said the manager of a cheap restaurant on Park Row, "to see how far some men will go to get what they consider to be the worth of their money. Look at that fellow, for instance."

The reporter saw a well-dressed old man eating three of those hot cakes, which mean inevitable dyspepsia. These, with a cup of coffee, cost ten cents. In eating the cakes the old man used an eighth of a pound of butter at thirty-five cents per pound, liberal doses of tomato catsup, several spoonsful of horseradish and half a dozen pickles. There was very little if any margin of profit on his trade when he had finished. As he walked out of the restaurant with a satisfied air the manager said:

"It is curious how little attention some of our patrons pay to the religious signs on the walls. But it seems to me that the one under which he was sitting is peculiarly fitting in his case."

The sign read: "Thou Shalt No' Steal."—N. Y. Advertiser

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—Monsignore is a title conferred upon members of the papal household and church and also upon prelates. All archbishops are monsignores, but all monsignores are not archbishops. In the case of an archbishop the title monsignore is, as it were, a familiar form of address.

—The directors of the United Presbyterian seminary at Allegheny, Pa., report that the invested endowment has increased during the year by $18,000 and is now a little over $171,000. The young men's fund is about $38,000. The income from the past year from all sources was a little over $14,000.

—The number of free-pew churches in New York city will probably be increased by the addition of the Episcopal Church of the Ascension. Rev. Percy S. —The statistics of the Presbyterian church in England, presented recently, show a membership of 66,971, an increase of 200. The number of congregations remains the same, 290. —The legislature has passed the appropriations for Michigan university for 1893. They amount to $182,300. The parish of St. Joachim, which is also an Italian church, has about 15,000 communicants, and it is estimated that 7,800 attend mass there every Sunday, there being six services.

—The summaries of statistics of the Congregational churches in this country, as completed, show 5,139 churches, a gain of 154; 541,725 members, a gain of 16,628; benevolent contributions, $2,651,892, an increase of $203,017; home expenditures, $7,138,592, an increase of $346,985. The total additions to the churches have been 54,576, of which 31,582 were on confession. There have been 10,040 adult baptisms and 10,357 infant baptisms.

—There are several passages in the Scriptures which convey the idea that some great secret—the details of some monstrous mystery—was communicated to the apostles during the time that He was associated with them in the flesh. All the early "Christian fathers," and a great many modern divines of high standing, believe that the "secret" was made known to the apostles with the understanding that it was to be handed down to the heads of the church until the end of time.

A RICE TABLE IN JAVA.

It Is the First Substantial Meal of the Day.

In Java, as in most really warm countries, it is customary to rise early and to take a cup of tea or coffee, together with a biscuit and some fruit, immediately on leaving one's bed. This is followed by a more substantial breakfast; but the first really serious meal is served at half-past twelve and is the equivalent of the French dejeuner a la fourchette or the Anglo-Indian tiffin. This meal is called rice table (rystafel), from the principal dish—a very elaborate curry, in the preparation of which the Malay cooks are especially skillful.

The peculiarity of the rice table consists in the number and variety of dishes presented. From these dishes the guest has to select the materials which, together with the rice upon the soup plate before him, are to constitute his curry. It is also to as well know beforehand that one is not required to lunch solely on curry, but that the rice table is succeeded by courses of ordinary luncheon dishes. It is a case, therefore, of embarras de richesses.

There are two dangers to be avoided. In the first place it is quite possible, in spite of the number of the dishes presented singly, to say nothing of an octagonal tray containing a separate chutney in each of its nine compartments, to get no lunch at all. For nothing is easier than, after saying "Nein" to a succession of frivolous compounds to dismiss the one solid and palatable dish capable of sustaining an Englishman until dinner-time. The second danger is that of making up one's curry "not wisely but too well" and leaving neither appetite nor capacity for the beefsteak or for any of the other solid dishes which subsequently appear.—Chicago Record.

What All Can Do.

No man has a right to say he can do nothing for the benefit of mankind, who are less benefitted by ambitious projects than by the sober fulfillment of each man's proper duties. By doing the proper duty in the proper place, a man may make the world his debtor. The results of "patient continuance in well-doing" are never to be measured by the weakness of the instrument, but by the omnipotence of Him who blesseth the sincere efforts of obedient faith alike in the prince and in the cottager.—Detroit Free Press.

ABYSMAL DEPTHS OF THE SEA.

Beauties Revealed by the Slime at the Bottom of the Ocean.

The new submarine world now explored and mapped out presents a very different picture from that painted for us by the poets. But a short time has elapsed since the bottom of the ocean was supposed to be the counterpart of the face of the earth above water—with hills and valley, with precipitous mountains lifting toward the surface and profound gorges sinking to unfathomable depths. The ocean floor is far less diversified than the land. Here and there, to be sure, islands in mid-ocean are the summits of enormous mountains, rising more or less abruptly from a generally level surface, and the sea lying over a narrow, depressed region in northwestern Pacific reaches its greatest depth. But this is exceptional; in its general character the ocean bottom consists of vast flat or slightly undulating plains. An extraordinary circumstance that has been noticed with interest, and that always creates surprise when first learned, is the entire absence of foreign matters in the deeper part of the ocean's floor. Of all the vessels lost in midocean, of all the human beings that have been drowned, of all the marine animals that have perished, of all the clay, sand and gravel let fall by dissolving icebergs, of all the various substances drifted from every shore by shifting currents—not a trace remains; but in their place water from one thousand to two thousand five hundred fathoms in depth covers the uniform deposit of thick, bluish, tenacious slime, called globigerina ooze. A bit of this under a powerful lens is a revelation of beauty not readily forgotten. The ooze is composed almost entirely of the daintiest, most delicately beautiful shells imaginable. At depths greater than twenty-five hundred fathoms the bottom of the sea consist mainly of products arising from exposure, for almost incalculable periods, to the chemical action of sea water, of pumice and other volcanic matters. This finally results in the formation of the red clay deposits that are considered characteristic of the profoundest depths of the ocean. Carbonate of lime, which in the form of the shells of foraminifera, makes up so large a part of the globigerina ooze, is here almost entirely absent. Sea water is very nearly a universal solvent, and before any shell, large or small, reaches the bottom of these tremendous abysms it is chemically eaten up, literally dissolved—a result which the enormous pressure of the water must materially hasten. At one thousand fathoms the weight of the water pressing on all sides of an object immersed to that depth is very nearly one ton to the square inch, or more than one hundred times that sustained at the sea level, and at the greatest depths the pressure is so increased that it would seem nothing could withstand it—in fact, heavy metal cylinders let down with the sounding apparatus are sometimes, on being drawn up again to the surface, found bent and collapsed; strongly-made glass vessels which the metal inclosed are shattered into fragments.

In the profoundest abysms of the sea are strange forms of life that never, save when brought up by the trawl, see the upper light. The work carried on by means of the United States fish commission vessel, the Albatross, has established the fact that forms of sea life inhabiting the upper waters may descend to about twelve hundred feet from the surface, but that below this to a depth of three hundred or three hundred and sixty fathoms a barren zone intervenes, where marine life seems absent. But still deeper, strange to say, has been discovered an abundant and varied fauna, new to science, living under conditions of tremendous pressure and paucity of the life-sustaining element of oxygen.—Cosmopolitan.

WHY IS FRIDAY CLEANING DAY?

One of the Deepest Mysteries Is the Routine of Housework.

"I wish some philosophic sharp would tell me why the majority of women clean up house Friday. I don't suppose the answer would be particularly thrilling, but the query invariably occurs to me every Friday morning when I am awakened by the cold drafts sweeping through the house and look out of the window to see all the curtains of the neighborhood tied up or drawn far asunder.

"'Because it's an unlucky day,' replied a housekeeper of my acquaintance.

"'Because it's hangman's day,' said another.

"'Because,' said another, 'it's the only day in the week we have to do it in. There's the washing Monday, ironing Tuesday, baking Wednesday, calling or receiving Thursday, and baking again Saturday.'

"'Because,' says another, 'it takes six days in the week to get ready for Sunday, and cleaning house comes in in regular order. Anybody ought to see that.'

"But I don't see it. I don't see why a house should be any cleaner Sunday than on any other day. I don't see why it isn't just as well to hang out the family wash Wednesday as upon Monday. Yet I have known women who wouldn't have a flat unless they could wash Monday. As five floors of two families each can't dry in the back yard and on the roof on the same day, and the Monday prejudice is very strong, landlords have had to erect huge telegraph poles in the rear of flat houses, from which poles lines are operated on a level of each floor. This system also affords the additional pleasure of a near view of the number and character of your neighbors' family wash. There must be some substantial reason for a woman doing just as her neighbors do and what all women in the civilized world do and have been doing for hundreds of years.—N. Y. Herald.

STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE.

How a Notable Housewife Makes the True Old-Fashioned Sort.

The strawberry shortcake of commerce still flourishes though it is well known to be a fraud. Its component layers continue to be of sweet and spongy texture in spite of Webster's Dictionary, which declares shortcake to be "an unsweetened breakfast cake shortened with butter or lard, rolled thin and baked." Of all these clauses the last only, "and baked," applies to the average shortcake. The Century Dictionary, second only as an authority to Webster, the incontrovertible, adds the facts that shortcake is "crisp," "rich with butter," "brittle," "friable," "inclined to flake off." Has anyone found the cup sponge cake variety "inclined to flake off?"

In a Chicago flat there lives a maiden aunt who of a Sunday evening shows her nephews and nieces what a strawberry short cake really may be. Her productions are masterpieces. They can be imitated but not equaled for they have that indescribable something belonging alone to the handiwork of genius. As to the mere practical details, this is what she does:

Two hours or thereabouts before tea she has the berries, in most liberal allowance, hulled and plentifully sugared, and set away on ice. This she says is of much importance for there must be enough juice thoroughly to soak the fruit. When tea time is drawing near she makes the short cake proper and it is then that her skill tells. For if she could not make flaky and feathery biscuit crust she would not attempt the higher task. She makes simply an especially good biscuit dough, rolling it with fairy lightness and seeing to it that it is quickly baked. When it is done she splits it with a deftness acquired only by thirty years' constant practice, butters it with a spendthrift-hand, sugars it a trifle, pours half the berries over the lower half, caps them with the other, puts the other half on top, and sets the whole in the oven until it is quite heated through. This last detail is the secret of success, she says, because it is the heat that brings out the flavor of the juicy crust. A pitcher of cream is the proper accompaniment of this sort of shortcake, though the fashionable creamed butter also goes well. Either way this is the true, crisp, friable, "inclined to flake," "short" shortcake.—Chicago Times.

The July Wide Awake

Has a leading article of great interest by George Bartlett, devoted to a description of "Concord Dramatics," or private theatricals in Concord in the days of the "Little Women." Maud R. Burton and Elizabeth Cumings have good Fourth of July stories. Cromwell Galpin's historical story of the Welsh discovery of America before Columbus is both picturesque and instructive. Caroline Ticknor's "summer boarder" story of "Fantine" is timely and suggestive; Etta B. Donaldson describes "A Unique Farm in Africa," (for the raising of ostriches), and J. P. H. Gastrell tells of "Electric Tricks." Annie H. Ryder has a practical nineteenth century talk with boys and girls, "In the Lookout with Columbus;" Jeannette A. Grant furnishes a delightful account of that portion of the Scottish highlands which some readers have traveled in fancy "With the Lady of the Lake;" and the Wide Awake Athletics article is by John Graham of the Charlesbank Gymnasium, and is devoted to "Out-of-door Gymnastics."

IT COVERS A GOOD DEAL OF GROUND

—Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. And when you hear that it cures so many diseases, perhaps you think "it's too good to be true."

But it's only reasonable. As a blood-cleanser, flesh-builder, and strength-restorer, nothing like the "Discovery" is known to medical science. The diseases that it cures come from a torpid liver, or from impure blood. For everything of this nature, it is the only guaranteed remedy. In Dyspepsia, Biliousness; all Bronchial, Throat and Lung affections; every form of Scrofula, even Consumption (or Lung-scrofula) in its earlier stages, and in the most stubborn Skin and Scalp Diseases—if it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

The worse your Catarrh, the more you need Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Its proprietors offer $500 cash for a case of Catarrh in the Head which they cannot cure.

A Delano Boy at the World's Fair.

CHICAGO, June 28, 1893,

DEAR Friend I thought that I would write to you. We are all well and hope you the same. I was out to the World's Fair three times. I was to the Minnesota building and the California building there I saw the beets that they make sugar out of and I saw a horse and man made out of dry fruits. I saw a cradle over 200 years old that two presidents were rocked in

And I saw all of Washington's furniture. I was to the fisheries building and saw all kinds of fish, and I was to all the little buidings and I didn't see much there. I saw lots of Sedan chairs, and saw all kinds of people. I was into the flowery building and saw all kinds of flowers that come from all parts of the world. I was to the art building. I saw two little people and they came from Georgia and they were thirty or forty years old. I was out to Washington park, and I was out to Lincoln park and saw all kinds of animals; buffaloes, snakes, monkeys and lions and thats all I could think of that I saw out to Lincoln park.

I have lots of friends here. I was in the big stores. I was to a theatre. We live two blocks from the lake. And we go there every day and see the steam boats, and I was on the steamboat once. Send the newspaper once in a while. I have not seen anybody from Delano.

MAPLE LAKE MENTIONINGS.

The Maple Lake German Benevolent society had a grand picnic last Saturday. They had a big crowd, also for the dance in the evening. The Albion band played for them.

It was a good thing for Charley McKeig and Mike McAlpin that the village authorities didn't know where the key to the jail was last Saturday otherwise they would have languished behind the bars until Monday.

The Osborn and McMillan Elevator Co. have already unloaded 5 car loads lumber for their new elevator here, which will be ready for businesss in a few weeks.

A Westrup unloaded a car of lime last Monday.

Mary Elsenpeter of Buffala, was the guest of Mr, and Mrs. Westrup, Saturday and Sunday.

Herman Steege had his best girl out for a ride last Sunday:

Charley Maulzon has commenced laying foundation for his new blacksmith shop.

ROCKFORD.

W. C. Hawk. M. G. Warren, D. R. Tompson, K. C. Bucklin, P. H. Darrow & Son, have made large improvements to the village by building a sidewalk. They surely deserve the thanks of the community.

Last Thursday evening, June 29th, the members of the A. O. U. W. lodge, of this place, were given a grand surprise by their ladies and friends. Ice-cream, cake, and lemonade were served by the ladies, and a little instrumental and vocal music rendered. The evening was pleasantly spent and the event will long be remembered with pleasure by the members of the order.

The 4th of July dawned bright and clear and the rising sun beheld in this village the grandest celebration in Wright county. The Delano Band arrived about nine o'clock and led a magnificent procession, consisting of floats, representing the states, and the several business enterprises of the village. The several harvesting machines for sale in the village; a float containing the defenders of the nation, rag-a-muffins on foot and citizens in carriages. They marched through the principal streets of the village to the grove, where singing, speaking, reading of the Declaration of Independence and music by the band was the program. After dinner. The foot race, bicycle race, egg race, tug of war and several other sports were indulged in. The celebration concluding with a grand display of fireworks and a dance on the platform, at the grounds in the evening. Everything went off smoothly and well, and the committee deserve credit sor having so well performed their duties.

A large number of strangers were seen in the village the 4th, and quite a number from Delano, Buffalo, Hanover, Loretto, Minneapolis and other neighboring towns spent the day here.

Hon. Daniel Fish and wife, of Minneapolis, spent part of the 4th in Rockford. Mr. Fish was orator of the day.

Carl Ewing surprised his friends by stepping off the train, Tuesday morning. He has been in Illinois for some time and expects to return soon.

Hennepin county having lost considerable money by the failing of the banks in Minneapolis, work on the roads has been indefinately suspended and those who went from here to work have returned.

O. C. Roberts is doing a rushing business in farm machinery this season. He has sold a large number of cultivators.

Mr. Forrest Elliott and Miss Nellie Tallman were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Tallman, Tuesday, the 4th. Their many friends join in wishing them much happiness.

James Dixon's summer resort on Lake Charlotte is becoming quite a favorite place to spend a few days of Summer. He has a large number of boarders this Summer.

Judge Smith decided the Monticello bridge controversy last week by rendering a discission that the County Treasurer pay over the $6,000 in question on the bonds for building the bridge at Monticello.

Delano, Annandale, Clear Lake, and other interprising towns, will celebrate on the fourth, but Monticello does not seem to be in it. Why are things thusly? Echo answers, why.—Wright County Times.

St. Cloud possesses a most remarkable man—the superintendent of the city schools. On learning that the board contempted raising his salary for the following year, he demurred against such action.—Star News.

LONG LAKE.

Quite a number of people bound for Watertown, passed through our villiage for several days before the 4th.

Mrs Heberlain of Briggsville Wis. is visiting her children at Long Lake, Mr. W. J. Heberlain and Mrs. A. S. Gardner. She is accompanied by Miss Gertie Phillips.

Ben Franklin of Delano spent the 4th amongst relatives in this vicinity.

Miss Cole of Minneapolis is visiting with Mrs H. H. Archibald.

Amongst those who spent the 4th with relatives were, Gustave Darth, Mr. Campbell and wife (son of Rev. Wm Campbell) Richard Heutschell and Ray Nash.

S. H. Johnson and Frank Kingsley spent the 4th with the latters parents at Taylor's Falls.

Your correspondent was absent a few days last week at St. Paul.

Frank Lydiard accompanied his brother and Mr. Andrew Brown on their trip to California.

The latest joke is on a young salesman in the employ of one of our stores, who went to St. Paul last Saturday evening to meet some relatives whom he intended to bring to Long Lake. On meeting his relatives in St. Paul he became so confused on seeing his best girl with them, not expecting her, that he about forgot that the train for Long Lake would leave in about fifteen minutes. Time fled quickly and when he recovered from his surpris and attempted to board the train with his friends the train was already in motion, but he succeeded in getting his sweetheart and some satchels aboard, but failed to get his relatives and himself aboard. The young lady and satchels arrived safely at Long Lake and were met by friends, but the young man was obliged to remain over in St. Paul in a not very happy state of mind.

All who attend this school are required to be ready to begin work on the first day, at 9 o'clock a. m. Teachers will not be enrolled after the first week without rendering a sufficient excuse why they are tardy.

Board in private families $2.50 per week, and up; at the hotels for reduced rates.

The county surerintendent will be on the ground to render assistance in assigning boarding places, and in the arrangements of studies for the teachers.

CONZET, DARROW & SON,
Delano Rockford

One evil traceable to bicycling is the confirmed stoop which has already declared itself in many wheelmen a result so common in the less strongly built bicyclists of the Content as to have found into satisfaction as the "kyphosis bicyclistarum."

The dorsal curvature posteriorly, which used to be rare in boys under 14 years of age, is, now that the bicycle is so largely used, very frequently met with, particularly among those young bicyclists whose spinal column is developing more rapidly than the ligaments and muscles, and in whose case, therefore, the equilibrum betwin those parts is more or less disturbed.

Were it merely an unsighted deformity the stoop in question ought to be combated in every way; but confirmed dorsal curvature posteroral has consequences of its own quite mischievous enought to call for immediate counteraction. The displacement, embarrassed functional activity and arrested or diseased developement of these organs which kyphosis inevitably induces are all to serious to warrant the slightest neglect in remedying them.

Exercise of a kind to accustom the spinal column to an action directly antagonistic to the inclination forward of the bicyclist's attitute is what it needed. The use of the Indian clubs or such similar means of incurvating the spine anteriorly, throwing out the chest and maintaining the head erect, should be practiced with that object. All the undoubted advantages of bicylling may thus be retained without that cultivation of the stoop which tends to take a cubit from the stature of its inveterate exponents and to impose a hunchbacked developemeat on what it would then be a figure of speach to call the rising generation.—Lancet.

$3000 A YEAR: I undertake to insure with any fairly intelligent person, of either sex, who can read and write, and will follow my instructions, a salary of $3000 a year, or forfeit $1000 cash. Any one can do the work and live at home, wherever they may be located. There is no space to explain here how it can be done, but if you want employment, and will write me, I will explain the whole matter, send you a sample copy of the paper I publish, and start you in business, which you can follow successfully in your own locality, and report to me at the end of one week. Many of my present workers were entirely unknown to me a few weeks ago, and are now making from $3000 to $5000 a year each. I have already taught and provided with employment, at which they are making from $3000 to $10,000 a year each, over 1000 men, women, boys and girls, who are now making more money than they ever thought it possible to make at any employment. Some of these had never earned a dollar in their lives when they began. All are surprised at the ease and rapidity with which they learn the business. I want one more person in your locality to represent me and attend to my rapidly increasing business. Reader, if you want to know all about the best paying business now before the public, write me to-day. Don't put off and say you can't afford to spend a few cents for postage, when you have a chance like this before you. Don't say you can't write a letter, for I will explain everything, and furnish you all the information you need, free, by return mail. Don't say you can't spare the time, for you can work for me in your spare time, and increase your present income many times. Don't say you can't do the work, for you can do it as well as anybody, when you understand it. Don't say you can't get the money to start with, for you can begin in your own locality without leaving home, and without capital. Don't say you can't afford to take hold of a good thing when you see it, for you can't make money unless you do take hold of good things when you see them. Don't say you can't afford to write me a postal card, for you can't afford to throw away a chance to make money. Don't say you can't afford to write me a letter, for you can't afford to remain in ignorance of my offer. Don't say you can't afford to wait and think it over, for you can't afford to lose time. Don't say you can't afford to do anything, for you can't afford to be poor. Don't say you can't afford to be successful, for you can't afford to be a failure. Don't say you can't afford to be rich, for you can't afford to be poor. Don't say you can't afford to be happy, for you can't afford to be miserable. Don't say you can't afford to be independent, for you can't afford to be a slave to poverty. Don't say you can't afford to be a man, for you can't afford to be a coward. Don't say you can't afford to be a woman, for you can't afford to be a nonentity. Don't say you can't afford to be a boy or girl, for you can't afford to be ignorant. Don't say you can't afford to be anything, for you can't afford to be nothing. Don't say you can't afford to be something, for you can't afford to be nothing

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

A FATAL AMBITION.

A fellow of poetic soul
Once wrote a piece of verse.
For which he got five dollars whole.
Quoth he: "This might be worse!"

He tried again. Again success
With cash his efforts paid,
And bread-and butter came to bless
The pastime he essayed.

But in exalted mood one night,
To fortify the time,
He read a book that met his sight
Entitled: "Rules for Rhyme."

And as he read he tore his hair
And grief his soul possessed.
"Just think," he murmered in despair,
"The rules I have transgressed."

Alas! had he not been ensnared
By such ambition fine!
For since that day he has not dared
To write a single line.
—Tom Masson in the Club.

POMROY Iowa was visited on last Friday by a terrific storm, killing and wounding 150 people.

H. P. HALL has again been installed as editor-in-chief of the St. Paul Globe. Mr. Hall needs no introduction to its readers, but his presence will give a sense of relief as to the future of the paper.

CONGRESS will meet in extra session on Aug. 7, at the call of President Cleveland. This is the first time for a third of a century that the Democrats have had a chance to make a law entirely their own, and it is to be hoped that they will make some good ones, that will aid in quieting the nerves of this great nation, and restore confidence to her people.

WHO says Thomas J. McDermott a young Route Agent for 8 years, and who, besides keeping up his runs satisfactorily, to even Perkins, his Republican boss, fitted himself for a lawyer, and was admitted to the bar, is not a competent man for any position in the mail or any other service in this country? That's the kind of men that makes our nation great.

SUNDAY opening of the World,s Fair is not from reports, proving a drawing, nor a remunerative card. The crowds are not big enough, on Sunday to pay for keeping open. Many exhibits not being open, people prefer to go in when all is ready for visitors. Religiously inclined people do not attend what they consider a wrongly conducted Fair, even during week days consequently as much is lost in this way in the six days as would be gained in the one if it should prove to be as well attended as some of its backers think it ought to be.

THE terrible holocaust occurring at Chicago on Monday should serve as a lesson to authorities to be more careful in constructing buildings, and see that no such fire traps be allowed in places where it endangers the lives of people. Firemen should be looked after and not be sent or permitted to go into a place of such danger as that cold storage ware house proved to be. Had the fire cought or spread to the buildings filled with visitors to the fair or to the frail structures used as hotels, how many more lives would have been sacrificed no one can tell.

"DAVE HILL right after all" is a caption in last weeks Eagle the prelude, to the quotation from that gentlemen, which appears to have been written by "home talent" would lead one to believe that the "Old Bird" has about concluded to get down on the other side of the fence for a season, now that the Democrats are in power in the this country. Mr. G. has evidently felt a little down at the heel ever since the G. O. P's caucus sent O. L. Billings Esq. as chairman of the delegation to the county convention last year instead of himself, who was a close second in the race for the coveted prize. True as a magnet to pole. The Eagle is attracted by the "Financial" wing of politics.

PRESIDENT Cleveland has been sick with rheumatism, at his home at Buzzards bay. He is reported as able to be about again, and is staying in retirement to write one of the most important documents of this century; a message to the Congress of a great and free nation concerning ways and means of ridding the country of one of the greates financial troubles she has ever experienced. All eyes are centered on him. His actions and advice are depended on to cut the Gordian knot, and open up the strings to the thousands of pocket books and bank vaults that contain the gold of the country and again set in motion the wheels of industry and of commerce, and spread peace and happiness throughout our land. May he succeed is the prayer of every true and loyal American citizen.

THE money stringency, now so much talked about, appears to be one in imagination rather than in fact. People have led themselves to believe that there is not enough money in the country to do business with and have allowed themselves to be led into the notion that the best each can do is to hold onto all the money they have, and can get, and to get hold of all they can. Men, instead of paying debts with their accumulated wealth, stave off their creditors, while they keep their money in their pockets; and, if any man owes them, they press him for what is claimed by them. Banks have become afraid that a run may be made on them any day, consequently, get in all the money they can, loan out none, but hoard it up to meet the feared time when they will be called upon to pay their depositors off. A few days ago we heard a man say, "I have got two dollars at home, and I intend to keep it until I see where the next two dollars are coming from." This is the spirit that seems to prevail among a large class of people, and to have spread among those with small as well as large capital. We read a few days since of a merchant who owed a hundred dollars, in hard times. One day a man paid him a bill of that denomination; the temptation to hoard it was great, but he concluded to pay his debts with it and did so. Before night another man, who owed him, brought the same bill back. It had paid several hundred dollars of debts in that small town that day and returned to the man who had so honestly determined to pay his debts, and take his chances on getting more. Perhaps this might be the case with many people who are in debt, but are still hoarding the money; if they would put it into circulation, somebody else could be deriving the benefit. Of what use is money stored away; you can't eat it, you can't wear it, you can't keep warm by it, and a great many can't even sleep nights with it. If you have any of the troublesome stuff piled up to fret over, and owe debts, pay them. If you need anything buy it as you always did, and you will not suffer any more than you will with it hoarded away. Of course, the John Sherman Silver Law may make gold short with the government, but why should it so effect individuals?

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 7, 1893.

Secretary Gresham is probably the only member of the cabinet who will remain continuously in Washington until the opening of the extra session of Congress, on August 7. The rest of them will endeavor to get a little rest between now and then. Secretary Lamont is now in Maine with his family, and Secretaries Carlisle and Herbert are at the World's Fair, while the Attorney General is in Massachusetts. Secretary Hoke Smith will combine business with his vacation, by making a trip through the West and visiting various subordinates of his department. President Cleveland does not expect to return until just before the assembling of Congress, as he wishes to prepare his message to Congress, which will be in some respects the most important he ever wrote, free from interruption.

Notwithstanding all the newspaper talk about an administration programme for the extra session of Congress, it can be positively stated that there will be no such thing as an administration programme. President Cleveland will in his message endeavour to make the necessity for the repeal of the Sherman silver law perfectly plain to Congress, and in that he will not overstep the bounds of his constitutional rights, but he has no idea of attempting to dictate a programme to Congress. He will merely point out what, in his judgement, ought to be done, leaving Congress to consider ways and means of how it shall be done at all.

The programme for the extra session will be arranged by Congress after it meets and not by any single individual, and an attempt to outline it before the members of Congress have had an opportunity to consult upon it is nothing more or less than guesswork.

Representative Holman, whose ideas on economy in administering the Government are widely known, says nothing would be more conducive to economy than the imposition of an income tax by Congress. Speaking on the subject this week he said: "The possibilities for wealth in the United States are beyond all calculation. They are enormous. If we tried to live up to them in our public expense we would inaugurate an era of extravagance in the midst of which free institutions could not live. Behind Congress is the wealthier class of citizens. It is to their interest that the expenditures of the government should be lavish. They are the gainers by building contracts, by river and harbor contracts, and so on. You see plenty of lobbies of rich men or their representatives here at each session of Congress. You never see a lobby of poor men. You may not know it, but there is not an evening that a memper of Congress cannot dine at one of the clubs in the city. The men who support these clubs are not men who contribute their fair share to the support of the national government. They are the people who profit by the expenditure of large sums of public money. That is the strongest argument, I think, in favor of the establishment of an income tax. If we make heavy appropriations now, the weight of them falls with the greatest force on the poor. If the government was supported by an income tax, these same people who are here urging us to spend money now, would be here in the same force urging us to economize. Their interests then would be in economy." This argument may be new to many but it is none the less interesting on that account.

The recent shake up in the Weather Bureau by which several of its highest officials were retired to private life, is believed to be but the beginning of an entire reorganization of that branch of the public service. Secretary Morton thinks it has been to extravagantly run.

Many unsuccessful attempts have been made while Speaker Crisp was in town this week to get a hint from him as to who would be chairman of the most important House committees in the new House, his own re-election to be Speaker being taken for granted. There has been lots of talk about President Cleveland being opposed to this or that chairman of the last House being given the same place in the new House, but a member of the cabinet stated several days ago that Mr. Cleveland had never made any request or even a suggestion to Mr. Crisp concerning who should be chairman of any House committe. It is altogether probable that some of the old chairmen will fail to get back their places, but it will be because the judgement of Mr. Crisp is in favor of a change and not because of any interference on the part of Mr. Cleveland, who although a wonderfully industrious man, could never find time to do one-tenth of the things he is credited with doing.

FRANK.

MAPLE PLAIN.

The county road work in this vicinity was brought to an abrupt end last week by the failure of the commissioners to get any of the public funds from the banks, where something like $150,000 has been on deposit.

Ere this number of the GAZETTE has reached your subscribers, Mr. Editor, the annual school election will have been held. From present indications, Landlord Julius Hardt, of the popular Star Hotel, who has served for more than a dozen years as clerk of the Maple Plain school board, will be re-elected. Mr. Hardt has given much careful thought to the new school house, which is now going up, and the general sentiment of the people seems to be that it would not be good policy or for the best interests of the school to vote the business out of Mr. Hardt's hands just at this time.

Commissioner Egan called Superintendent of Schools Lewis and his assistant, Shaver, to account last January for having failed to visit many, very many of the schools during the preceeding two years, for which time they had been paid $6,000 salary. Their excuse was that it was not possible for them to get around to so many schools in two years and attend to the other business of the office. But Lewis and Shayer have managed to get around during the past six weeks to every school board in the county, to try to induce the districts to purchase a series of text books selected by them. They are making an heroic effort to secure the patronage of Hennepin county for certain publishing houses. They are working for the same publishing house. There is money in it. If the superintendent had the best interests of the people at heart, he would not advise, much less urge, the purchase of new books in these hard times, especially when the schools are already supplied with an abundance of books good enough.

Enoch Cleveland says that he now has a wife that he is proud of. Enoch brought up from Minneapolis with his new wife more than a ton of new furniture, and is fixing up his hotel in first-class style. Mrs. Cleveland is an excellent housekeeper, and an A No. 1 cook, says Enoch, and the venerable proprietor predicts that when her merits are known to the puplic the Maple Plain Boarding House will catch nearly all of the trade.

Two of Maple Plain's vivacious girls picked a bone with their escort to the Delano celebration and he left them to get back to Maple Plain the best way they could. Madam Rumor was an eye witness and she says the girls were in no wise to blame. The girls enjoyed the celebration and returned home with their folks.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

THE ways of auctioneers in different parts of the world vary greatly. MOUNT TACOMA, in the state of Washington, is the highest mountain in the United States, according to the six measurements taken by Fred G. Plummer, civil engineer. The measurements show the mountain to be over 15,000 feet in height, instead of only 14,444 feet, as shown by the government maps. Mount Whitney, which is supposed to be the highest mountain in this country, is only 14,898 feet high.

THE oldest church existing in the United States is situated near Smithfield, Va. It was built during the reign of Charles I., between the years 1630 and 1635, the brick, lime and timber being imported from England. The timber is English oak and was framed in England. It is a brick structure, erected in the most substantial manner. The mortal has become so hardened that it will strike fire in collision with steel.

IT is a remarkable coincidence that that figure nine is intimately connected with every great mining excitement of the present century. In 1839 came the Mantazan mountain mining craze, where it was reported that gold nuggets as big as flour barrels had been found. The California fever came in 1849, and the Pike's Peak boom in 1859. In 1869 the lead was struck that made Virginia City a place of importance, and in 1879 the Leadville carbonates were discovered to be valuable. Of course, the connection of the figure nine is only a coincidence, but it is none the less curious.

Seventeen of Them Leap to the Roof Below and Are Killed—Many Others Receive Severe Injuries.

FATAL FLAMES AT THE FAIR.

CHICAGO, July 11.—The world's fair received a baptism of fire and blood Monday afternoon, the Cold-Storage building proving a funeral pyre for thirteen firemen and four Columbian guards, twenty-four persons receiving serious injuries. R. A. Drummond, Boilermaker Bernard Murphy and Henry Ceduldid are missing and are supposed to have been burned to death. The fire broke out in the tall chimney, the defective condition of which caused the insurance men to cancel the risks on the building one month ago. While trying to fight a blaze 30 feet above them the firemen were wrapped in flames that burst out without warning 70 feet below. Every man jumped, some into a pit of fire, others onto the roof, from which, maimed and bruised, they were taken to the hospitals.

The Dead.

The following were killed:

William Denning, truck company No. 8; Philip B. Breen, truck company No. 8; Capt. James Garvey, engine company No. 1; John H. Freeman, lieutenant engine company No. 1; James Fitzpatrick, 54 years old, captain engine company No. 2, compound fracture of arm, crushed shoulder, burns and internal injuries, died at Emergency hospital at 9 o'clock; John McBride, 5727 Sherman street, compound fracture of the right leg and burns on arms, head and body, died at the Emergency hospital at 8 o'clock; John Cahill, truck company No. 8; Burton E. Page, captain truck company No. 3; Lieut. Moulter, truck company No. 16, died in the Emergency hospital; Charles Purvis, lieutenant of engine company No. 4; John A. Smith, driver engine company No. 2; Columbian Guard Pohr and three other guards, names not yet determined.

First Seen on the Cupola.

Just exactly how the fire started will probably never be known, but the flames first appeared on the top of the wooden cupola which surmounted the smokestack. The stack, 191 feet high, was built of steel or iron pipe incased in wood. It was just a trifling blaze at first, but the little tongues of flame, fanned by a stiff breeze from the northeast, circled around and around, gradually eating their way downward until the wooden pillars were on fire. By this time the firemen had reached the main roof of the building, and under orders from Acting Chief Murphy commenced to climb to the first platform, 70 feet from the roof. They ascended by means of wooden cleats nailed to the side of the tower, taking no ladders with them and but three or four coils of rope. The first effort to get a line of hose up was from the southeast corner of the building, an extension ladder being run up there. Then the men on the tower let down two of their ropes, which were attached to the hose, and the work of drawing up commenced.

All this time the flames were slowly consuming the crown of the tower, and pieces of blazing wood droppping down inside and between the stack and its covering of pine started the flames which soon wrapped the men in an embrace of death. Ten minutes had elapsed before even a thought of danger struck the firemen, but a little puff of white smoke that came from near their feet told them that they were standing on dangerous ground. The men on the roof began to feel a heat that did not come from above, and simultaneously with their shouts of warning came a cry of horror from the crowd. The eyes of 25,000 people caught sight of a tongue of flame breaking out just below the platform on which the firemen were standing, still pulling up the hose. Instantaneously from between every pillar and seemingly from out the very walls swept sheets of flame, which curled upward, wrapping the tower in their embrace. Men who had shouted a warning the moment before stood dumb before the awful sight, the women in the multitude alone found voice. Their shrieks rose above the roaring and crackling of the flames, and as they died away a vast moan swept over the crowd—a pitiful cry from strong men who knew that death in its most awful form had claimed those whose forms were just visible through the smoke.

Leaps for the Line.

The moan changed to a groan of "O God!" as the wind blew the flames higher and higher, but in a moment all was silence as one of the firemen made a leap for the line of hose. He caught it with one hand and shot downward into the sea of flame, reappearing a moment later with clothes on fire, but still retaining his hold. When he reached the roof he ran to the north side of the building and was soon lowered to the ground. He was John Davis, of the Midway Plaisance company. Had his companions followed his example the loss of life would not have been so appalling, but for some reason they hesitated for a minute and that minute cut off their escape in that direction, as the wind swept the flames around the hose and speedily burned it in two.

An Awful Scene.

Through the smoke and the flames the tall figure of Capt. Fitzpatrick was plainly visible, and by his gestures it was evident that he was issuing orders to his men. Slowly one by one they turned and commenced to creep around the balcony to the north side, the flames almost touching their hands and feet. There was no hurrying, no panic. Every man awaited his turn, and in some instances insisted on another taking precedence. The heart of the onlooking multitude stood still as the perilous journey was being made, and a cheer marked its completion. But the men were no better off there. The flames had worked their way upward all around the tower and they could not escape them much longer. A rope was thrown out and fell almost to the roof, but before a man could grasp it it was burnt in two. Then a shriek of horror went up from the spectators. Strong men turned their heads away and women fainted by the score. The crowd was so dense that escape was impossible.

Bid Good-by on the Ledge.

Closer and closer together huddled the men on that narrow wooden ledge that stood between them and death. They knew that there was little chance of escape and with the courage of true heroes they resolved to meet it like brave men. One poor fellow forced his way through the little band of comrades, but his was no selfish object. He grasped one of them by the hand, threw his arms around his neck, and there they said good-by to one another. The example was infectious, farewells were said, and messages to be delivered if one or the other escaped were given.

The Doomed Men Jumped.

Suddenly a figure shot out from the ledge and descended through flame and smoke to the roof. But that wooden affair proved no barrier to the poor fellow's progress, and through it he went into the pit of fire below. Jumping or roasting to death was the only alternative now, and a second man took the latter chance. He did not fall as the first, feet downward, but commenced to turn and turn, striking on his head and being killed immediately. The fate of the two who jumped was so awful that the survivors hesitated, and the next man seized the piece of rope that was burning shorter and shorter every minute. He slid down, let go as he reached the burning end and dropped. He fell into a pit of fire, and his comrades on the roof, who had taken off coats, vests and even trousers to form nets to break the falls, were driven away by the rapidly encroaching flames.

Went Down with the Tower.

Down the doomed men jumped one by one, and soon there were only two men left on that fire-encircled platform. Capt. Fitzpatrick, who had directed the movements of the men, sought to induce his companion to go down first, but he would not. Every second was precious, and a moment's delay meant certain death. The captain seized the rope, which by this time was only 20 feet long, and shot downward. As he released his hold he gave a spring to the north and managed to throw himself beyond the flames. The last man sought to follow his example, but just as his hands left the burning cord the entire tower wavered in the wind and fell with a crash, carrying him downward with the fall.

Rush to Fitzpatrick's Rescue.

Chief Murphy had been standing on the roof doing all he could, but was driven back by the flames and had just reached the ground when Capt. Fitzpatrick fell. He shouted to R. J. Kennedy, captain of company 5, and Hans Rehfeldt, of the hook and ladder company, and together the three started up the ladder. The firemen on the ground played a stream of water around the men as they went up, nearing the flame. Murphy was the first to clamber on the roof, closely followed by Kennedy and Rehfeldt. The chief took a small piece of rope, with which he securely fastened the ladder to the roof. Then, in company with his men, he ran to where Fitzpatrick lay. Raising the wounded man to his feet they tied a line securely around his body just under his arms and carefully and slowly lowered him to the ground, where willing hands were in waiting for the unfortunate. Fitzpatrick was placed in an ambulance and driven with all speed to the Emergency hospital. The three brave men then came down the ladder and it seemed as if they were completely engulfed in flame.

Hard Fire to Fight.

With the collapse of the tower the flames burst forth from every part of the building with a fury that baffled the efforts of the firemen. The men worked with tears streaming down their faces and yet worked well. They had no time to stop and think of the awful fate of their comrades, for the strong wind carried the flames to the sheds adjoining on the south and threatened the structures outside of the grounds on Stony Island avenue. It was 4 o'clock before the flames were under control and by that time the building had been reduced to a heap of charred timbers.

The large building north of the Storage building used as a stable was wholly destroyed. It required hard work of the firemen to save the Color building and paint shop. The loss on the stable is $4,000. The buildings across the street outside the fair grounds were scorched, but the fire did not make any great headway among them and the damage was trifling.

Many Wild Rumors.

Rumors of scores of lives being lost flew thick and fast and gained in numbers as they left the fair and traveled to the city. One statement was that a party of thirty or forty had been eating lunches in the observatory of the building, all members of which were incinerated. There was no truth in this, neither in the statement that half a dozen young women had been burned.

Searching the Ruins.

The work of recovering the bodies was begun at 4:30 o'clock. The ruins were yet smouldering and the steaming heat prevented the firemen from prosecuting their work long at a time. The first body was taken out at 5:30 o'clock, a charred stump bearing no resemblance to a human form. Another was found fifteen minutes later and at frequent intervals until eight had been recovered. At the approach of night the work was discontinued on account of the dangerous condition of the ruins and lack of light.

Fully Twenty Thousand Witnesses.

The awful sight was witnessed by fully 20,000 horror-stricken visitors to the fair. The crowd shuddered, and as the men jumped or fell on the roof, some killed outright and others maimed and mangled for life, cries of "O! O! Isn't that awful!" were heard on every side. A good many women evinced their emotion by crying outright, for it was one of the most pitiful sights ever witnessed. There were a good many men in that crowd who cried like little children and some were so overcome by their emotion that they almost went frantic, the sight was so heart-rending. It seemed as if the bodies of the men would rebound from the roof when they struck it, sometimes going 6 or 8 feet up in the air. It was a sorrowful sight as viewed from the crowd in the vicinity of the burning building.

Called on the Troops.

The crowd, horror-stricken as it was, was beyond the control of the Columbian guards, and although 800 of them tried to keep the people back and to open lines through which the ambulances and fire apparatus could come their efforts were utterly futile. Forty-five United States soldiers appeared on the scene at double trot in the nick of time, and with their bayonets forced the crowd back and did what the 800 guards could not do, kept it in order and at a safe distance from the burning building.

The Burned Warehouse.

The cold storage warehouse was situated south of the Transportation building annex, close to the Stony Island boundary and not far from the Sixty-fourth street entrance. It covers a ground space of 130 by 255 feet, and its exterior was severely plain, having less ornamentation than any of the other exposition buildings. The warehouse was fitted out with a complete apparatus for the manufacture of ice and for cold storage. It contained restaurants and cafes and the roof was arranged for a promenade, while the big tower which cost the life of the firemen was used for an observatory.

It is probable that the entire building will be totally destroyed. It cost $250,000 and is stored with meats, fruits and wines. The whole loss will probably reach half a million. It was built and occupied by the Hercules Iron Works company, manufacturers of refrigerating machinery.

The Loss $200,000.

W. N. Donaldson, superintendent of the burned building, said: "The loss on building and machinery will run up toward $200,000. Some of the machinery may be saved. Building and machinery are covered by insurance, I understand."

The loss is by no means confined to building and machinery and company property. Every government on the globe and every state in the union represented at the exposition is a loser to some extent, as they all had goods in the cold-storage. These goods consisted principally of wines, beer, ale and last year's fruits that were to be put in competitive exhibition when the jury of awards commences its work. It is estimated that the Spanish government sustains a loss of $20,000 on fine wines and liquors, and Lowney, of Boston, loses $10,000 worth of choclate candies. The other quantities of wine, beer and ale destroyed were worth probably from $25,000 to $35,000. No estimate can be placed on the value of last year's fruits that were stored in the building. All the states and Canada were represented.

In the Hospital.

The service at the hospital was quick and efficient. There was no noise, no unnecessary stir or bustle in the hall. Only the physicians, nurses and officers of the institution were allowed in the building, and as soon as the suffering could be lifted from the ambulances they were taken into the wards, where their wounds were quickly dressed. On the first alarm of fire the three ambulances belonging to the Emergency hospital, supplemented by three police patrol ambulances, rushed to the fire. These returned quickly after the tower with the firemen fell bearing two patients, in almost every case, in each wagon. These were the extreme cases. A second run resulted in bringing to the hospital several more wounded men, but these were, for the most part, only slightly hurt, and after their wounds were dressed they left for their homes. It was a sorrowful spectacle that lasted for hours until the ambulances came no more, and the undertakers' wagons came for the dead.

Relief Measures.

Preparations were begun before the fire was out to afford every measure of relief practicable for the families of the unfortunate firemen. It was decided to place contribution boxes in all the buildings so that both exhibitors and visitors might have an opportunity of contributing a relief fund. The council of administration will probably take some action to-day in the nature of a recommendation to the executive committee for an appropriation. This was not determined upon, but was discussed. The Hercules iron works is itself responsible for damages or injury in its building, but yesterday's holocaust was so unexpected and terrible that the exposition company will make an appropriation. Contributions began coming in before the fire was half over. Fully $2,000 was collected. After the fire was well under way an informal meeting of the foreign commissioners was held. On motion of Commissioner General Ungaro, of Italy, and Royal Commissioner Soutscheffsky a subscription was opened for the sufferers and the families of the victims. A large amount was realized, and it was decided to invite all commissioners to contribute.

Twelve Thousand Men Idle.

ST. PAUL, Minn., July 11.—There is widespread suffering in the iron ranges of the Lake Superior district. It is the worst since the black days of 1872. There is scarcely a mine in the Marquette, Menominee or Gogebic ranges that is not either completely closed or greatly curtailed in operation. It is probable that 12,000 men in the upper peninsula of Michigan and northern Wisconsin are to-day out of work by reason of the closing of these mines.

THE OLD SCHOOL EXHIBITIONS.

O, the old school exhibitions! will they ever come again,
With the good, old-fashioned speaking from the girls and boys so plain?
Will we ever hear old "Iser" with its rapid roll and sweep,
And "Pilot, 'tis a fearful night; there's danger on the deep?"

Sweet Mary doesn't raise her lambs like Mary did of old;
Their fleece is not "as white as snow;" they're wandering from the fold.
The boy upon "the burning deck" is not one-half as fine—
He was not "born at Bingen, at Bingen on the Rhine!"

The girls don't speak in calico, the boys in cotton jeans;
They've changed the old-time dresses 'long with the old-time scenes;
They smile and speak in ancient Greek; in broadcloth and in lace;
And you can't half see the speaker for the collar 'round the face!

O, the old school exhibition! it is gone forever more!
The old schoolhouse is deserted, and the grass has choked the door;
And the wind sweeps 'round the gables, with a low and mournful whine
For the old boys "born at Bingen—at Bingen on the Rhine!"

A WHITE KITTEN.

The Important Part It Played in a Pretty Romance.

Miss Lucia Marsh was walking down to the gate, between the beds of bright pinks standing stiffly erect on each side of the path. Their spicy fragrance scented the air, and she plucked one and stuck it in her belt.

As she reached the gate, a man passed carrying a basket from which issued faint mewing sounds. He looked aside hastily, and as for Miss Lucia, she cast her eyes quite the other way. He went by, and entered the iron gate next door, shutting it with a clang. Miss Lucia looked after him with a scornful sniff of her small nose.

"He could as well have gone round the other way instead of coming past here," she said.

A shrill mew came over the fence, another and then another wail.

"Come, kitty," she heard him call. "Here, kitty, kitty!"

Miss Lucia was listening intently.

The calling ceased, and she heard the sound of his footsteps walking briskly on the planks laid around the house.

"I suppose 'twas a cat he had," she mused. "And what will he do with a cat?"

Miss Lucia picked up her skirts daintily and tripped down the street to her grandmother's, giving her neighbor, Reuben Spofford, and his new pet not another thought.

It was evident that Miss Lucia Marsh and Reuben Spofford were not the best of neighbors. The ill-feeling dated back to her father's time and his father's time, and now both fathers were dead, and Miss Lucia's mother, also, yet still there was no cessation of hostilities. Miss Lucia remained in the old homestead quite alone save for the two old servants, Martha Spinks and her husband. Reuben Spofford's sole living relative was an invalid aunt whom he cared for as gently as if she had been his mother. And if Reuben Spofford had been asked the cause of the unneighborliness on each side of the high division fence, or if the same question had been propounded to Miss Lucia Marsh, they would have looked at you in wonderment; for the cause of the feud was an old tale.

Miss Lucia was not especially young. She was younger than Reuben Spofford, and they both had been children when the courthouse was built. But they had never played together, and there were no merry cries across the high division wall, no games of ball nor blackberrying together like other neighbors' children. And they grew up in this fashion, and had been girl and boy, and now were maid and man, yet the division fence was as high and uncompromising as ever.

When Miss Lucia stood at the kitchen door next morning she was humming a snatch of a hymn and shaking the tablecloth at the same time. Fat old Aunt Martha stood laughing in the yard.

"Does yer see him, honey?" she said. "Jes' look at dat!" She pointed to the fence, which was running over with gay morning glories, their blue and pink and white cups spread like trumpets. And likewise running along the fence, and balancing himself by the tangle of vines, was a roly-poly white ball of a kitten. He grabbed one blossom after another in his sharp claws and doomed it to destruction. To and fro he scampered, sometimes tumbling, anon catching his feet unawares and nearly going headlong.

"He's ruining my vines," cried Miss Lucia. "Oh, Martha, how can you? Do chase him away—horrid little creature! Hurry, Martha!" Miss Lucia wrung her hands.

"Shoo, he can't hurt 'em," Martha answered, laughing. "But I'll chase him. Scat, you—scat!"

She waddled toward the fence, her fat sides shaking, and away went the kitten over the other side.

"Now that's bad," said Miss Lucia. "He's going to be a nuisance."

The white kitten seemed to regard that fence as his special play-ground. He enjoyed the vines very much, and finally destroyed their beauty completely. Then he began making short sorties into the enemy's camp, i. e., scampering across Miss Lucia's back yard and then home again. The first few times Miss Lucia assisted his departure. She impressed upon Aunt Martha the fact that he must be sent home. And yet, one day, what did Aunt Martha do but catch her mistress in the very act of giving the white kitten a saucer of milk!

"I don't think, Martha," she said, explanatorily, "that he gets very well fed. See how he drinks that milk!"

"He's a shore little scamp," said Martha, chuckling. In her big black body beat a very tender heart for all dumb creatures, four-footed or feathered.

When Miss Lucia sat sewing, next day, on the latticed porch, the white kitten walked demurely up the steps and sat down before her and began to wash his face.

"Go home," said Miss Lucia, severely. "Go home, sir!"

The white kitten curled over and kicked up its feet, and played with the hem of her dress.

"You ought to go home," said Miss Lucia, faintly.

Presently he found her ball of yarn, and rolled over it and tangled it into a hopeless snarl. Miss Lucia leaned back and laughed at him softly. She gave him some milk and sent him back over the wall.

The next morning she came out to the porch, and there, curled up sound asleep in her rocking-chair, lay the white kitten.

Miss Lucia looked at him helplessly. Then she sat down on the steps and fell to thinking. Reuben Spofford would be very angry if he knew where his pet spent most of its time. And it should not—a soft furry body came creeping up over her shoulder and rubbing itself against her soft pink cheek. A small paw caught a fallen tress of hair.

The white kitten declined to go home at all. He enjoyed himself at Miss Lucia's for two days. Then one morning his master came around to the side porch and there he saw the white kitten climbing up over Miss Lucia's shoulder. The morning sun shone upon her head, turning the stray tendrils to golden. She was laughing merrily.

Reuben blushed and stammered something unintelligible. Miss Lucia turned quickly and the crimson surged up in her face also. She felt as if she had stolen the white kitten.

"Yes," she said, hurriedly, "he—he would not go home. I tried to make him."

She held out the kitten to him, and Reuben Spofford thanked her and went away.

The kitten stayed at home for a week. Miss Lucia knew he must be shut up in some room, for the piteous occasional wails she could hear went to her heart.

"Perhaps, Martha," she said, "perhaps they forget to feed him sometimes. It's too bad."

The white kitten escaped at last. He came back to Miss Lucia. When next she saw Reuben Spofford pass, she ran out to him and handed him his pet.

But it was of no use. It came to pass that nearly every evening Reuben Spofford was obliged to come over to Miss Lucia's and take home the kitten. The white kitten was a larger ball of furriness than ever. He had not any name except Puss, but he did not seem to mind about that. And by degrees it began to seem quite natural that Reuben Spofford should call for his pet, and sometimes tarry a little. After awhile the two even joked a little, in a half embarrassed way, about the preference of the white kitten for Miss Lucia.

But Puss did not remain a kitten always, and when he became a big, soft, contented cat, lying upon the rug in front of Miss Lucia's fire, and just at her feet, it was not so easy to take him home, for he decidedly objected, and mentioned the fact quite loudly.

Then Reuben Spofford offered him to Miss Lucia, as he had done several times before.

"You might as well take him," he said, looking at her very earnestly. "You see he won't stay with me."

"Oh, I could not rob you of your pet," she said. "You—you think so much of him."

"Yes," he said. "But, see now, Miss Lucia, you had better take him. He is only happy with you."

She looked at him with troubled eyes. She knew it was true.

"I don't know what to do about it," she said. "I don't want you to give him up to me."

Reuben Spofford suddenly forgot about the old feud, and how long they had been at war.

"Well," he said, "there is another way. You—you can take me, too—if you will."

Miss Lucia turned her head aside with a little startled movement. He was regarding her so earnestly.

The movement awoke the white cat at her feet. He rose, stretched himself and arched his back, and in his own audacious fashion climbed right into Miss Lucia's lap, and curled himself up to sleep again.

And of course that settled it.—Times-Democrat.

TALL HAILSTONE YARNS.

One Piece of Ice as Big as a Millstone Said to Have Fallen.

During a storm at Morbihan, June 21, 1846, the hailstones in some instances actually attained the size of a turkey's egg, and one measured eight and three-quarters inches in circumference. May 4, 1697, a hailstone was found in Staffordshire, England, which was eleven and three-quarters inches in circumference. Volney tells of a storm at Ponchartrain in which hailstones fell which were as large as a man's fist, and one which he found himself weighed five ounces. Volta records a hailstone found in the neighborhood of Como which weighed nearly nine ounces, and there is good authority for the statement that hailstones weighing as much as a pound fell at Constantinople October 5, 1831. But there have been still more remarkable instances, if we accept the statements coming apparently from reliable sources. During a hailstorm at Cazorta, in Spain, June 15, 1829, some of the blocks of ice weighed four and a half pounds. It is the general opinion among scientists that for hailstones to attain such proportions several must have been fastened together, either when they reached the ground or while in descent. Under no other circumstances can the possibility of the above and the still more wonderful phenomena to follow be admitted. Even so, there is good reason to doubt Flammarion's statement that during the latter part of October, 1844, an awful hurricane devastated southern France, in which hailstones weighing eleven pounds fell, or that of Dr. Foissac, who cites an instance in which hailstones measuring three feet in length and width, with a thickness of two and one-quarter feet, fell to earth. When Dr. Foissac was accused of exaggeration he emphatically insisted on the truth of his statements, and to better maintain them added: "M. Hue, a Catholic missionary of Tartary, relates that hailstones of a remarkable size often fell in Mongalia, and that some of them have been found to weigh twelve pounds. During a heavy storm in 1843 a noise as of a terrible wind was heard in the air, and soon after there fell in a field not far from our house a piece of ice larger than a millstone. It was broken up with a hatchet, and though the weather was very warm it took three days to melt it completely."—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

FIRESIDE FRAGMENTS.

—Strawberries for Breakfast.—Stem ripe strawberries, cover with sugar and the juice of half a dozen oranges. Let stand one hour, sprinkle with pounded ice and serve.—Harper's Bazar.

—Corned Beef and Sauce.—Wash in four waters. Cover with cold water, burn often, boil twenty minutes to the pound. Serve with white sauce in gravy boat.—Good Housekeeping.

—Hard Sauce.—The more thoroughly hard sauce is beaten the better it is. Take equal weights of butter and sugar; beat these together until it is a light foamy mass. I think the extract of almond is a very nice flavoring for this sauce, but many might prefer some other. Some use only grated nutmeg. —Prairie Farmer.

—To Cook Asparagus.—Wash and cut the tender stalks into pieces two inches long and cover them with boiling salted water. When tender add a cup of rich milk, a tablespoonful of butter, a teaspoonful of sugar and a pinch of white pepper; let it boil up once. Have slices of buttered toast in a deep dish' pour the asparagus over and serve.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

—Mock Turtle Soup.—Put two ounces of butter in a saucepan and set it on the fire. When melted, add a tablespoonful of flour, stir, and when turning brown add three pints of broth (either beef broth or broth made by boiling a calf's head.) Boil five minutes, and then add about four ounces of calf's head cut in dice; mushrooms and truffles cut in dice. Boil five minutes. Cut two hard-boiled eggs and half a lemon in dice, and put into the tureen, and turn the soup over.—Boston Budget.

—Strawberry Ice Cream.—This is so easily made no one need to hesitate to try it. Rub a quart of the hulled berries through a sieve, add a pound of sugar and a quart of cream and freeze. If a quart of cream is not obtainable, use only a pint of it and make a custard of a pint of milk thickened with a teaspoonful of cornstarch sweetened to taste. When scalding stir in quickly two well-beaten eggs and remove from the fire before it thickens. When cool, add the cream and strawberries and freeze.—Orange Judd Farmer.

—Roast Lamb with Mint Sauce.—Pour a teacupful of boiling water over the piece of lamb as it lies in the dripping-pan. Cook in a steady oven, allowing from twelve to fifteen minutes to the pound; if the roast is stuffed, fifteen minutes to the pound is not too long. Baste frequently and plentifully, and turn another pan over it if it threatens to brown too quickly or too much. A shoulder of lamb is quite as nice as the leg, although it is less expensive. Have the bone removed and fill the place with a dressing made of bread crumbs.—Farm and Fireside.

—Fried Chicken.—Dip the slices of parboiled chicken, which should be quite cold, into beaten egg, then roll in fine cracker crumbs which have been salted and peppered. After a few moments repeat process until chicken is well coated. Fry until crisp four slices of sweet salt pork, dish, and fry chicken in fat. Toast six slices of bread, soak, butter, and place on a platter with pork as a garnish. When brown place a piece of chicken on each slice of toast. To fat in pan add two tablespoons of flour, and stir until browned. Add one pint hot water or milk, let boil, and pour over chicken. Prairie chicken, partridges and wild birds of all kinds are very fine cooked in this way.—Home.

SHE FOUND HIM OUT.

A Tragedy Which Was Enacted at the Administration Building.

"Don't muss my hair."

Standing half within the shadow of the administration building, with the softened beams of the moonlight playing cinch with her West Monroe street features, Myrtle Cummings gazed up with a fond and trusting gaze into the mobile countenance of Archibald Fitzmorris. But a few short weeks had these happy souls known the sweet communion of each other's company, but already Archibald knew that Myrtle was fond of pickles.

For years he had drifted through life alone, with no kindred spirit, to mend his suspenders, no sympathetic heart to ache when he lost his little all at the races. But now a new light had dawned upon him, his soul expanded beneath its cheering ray and he pressed Myrtle close against his four dollar vest with never a thought of the shirt bosom, which was, alas, so fast becoming a ruin.

As they stood there before the fountain, with the faint song of night birds, mellowed by distance, floating to their ears from the fairylike wooded island, the great white palaces rearing their massive domes above them, the silvery moonlight shimmering over all and Archibald's new shoes seeming to become tighter and tighter, the beauty and poetry of the scene inundated his soul till it overflowed with rapture and he took a fresh chew of plug.

"Myrtle," said he, in soft, persuasive tones, which echoed in the senses of the fair young girl like the low, sweet crooning of an old lullaby, "Myrtle, does not the love which I have declared for you awaken a sympathetic chord within your breast? Are you happy—perfectly happy—here in my arms?"

Lightly touching her bang with one tiny hand and shoving his necktie up into his raven locks with the other, the girl half coyly, with maidenly modesty, which caused her cheeks to flame, took a half-Nelson hold on Archibald and bestowed upon him one rapturous embrace which set his heart strings to fluttering madly and burst asunder his two-for-a-quarter collar.

"Here could I rest contented forever," she sighed as she tangled an eight-cent bone hairpin in his necktie.

Suddenly the girl started, a wild, hunted look flashed into her fawn-like eyes and she madly threw back Archibald's coat, while she gazed in terror at his vest. There upon his manly breast glittered a golden star with an eagle rampant in its center. The peachy bloom fled from her cheek as she asked in strained, almost filtered tones, "What does this mean, Archibald; why do you wear this emblem: can it be——?" and her voice trembled 'twixt hope and awful fear, which clutched her heart with an icy grasp, "can it be that you are a Columbian guard?"

Archibald started, a straight flush suffused his face as he answered in a low voice: "Alas! yes, Myrtle, I am. That star told you the worst."

"Then all is over between us," she replied coldly as she shrunk with a shudder from his arms. "Do not dare to speak to me again. I could have forgiven you the cigarettes and saying 'eyether and neyther' but this is too much—too much."—Chicago News

AN IMPORTANT OFFICE.

The Chief Clerkship of the United States Treasury Department.

Filled at Present by Logan Carlisle, Son of the Secretary—Directly Responsible for an Annual Expenditure of Two Millions.

[Special Washington Letter.]

Gentlemen who occupy high official station in the executive branch of the government are frequently criticised for giving employment to their relatives or members of their immediate families. The newspaper critics who deliver philippics upon this subject might possibly restrain their ever ready pencils if they understood the subject better than they do. There are many positions in the national capital requiring the assistance and confidential aid of the most reliable person who can be found.

The secretary of the treasury, Mr. Carlisle, the vastness and importance of whose work was recently described to the readers of this paper, was criticised by a few writers because of the appointment of his son to the chief clerkship of the treasury department. As a matter of fact the secretary of the treasury is very fortunate in having a son of proper age and executive ability to appoint to this important position. The private secretary to a member of the cabinet must be a gentleman of a great deal more than ordinary ability in every respect; but the chief clerk of the great financial department of the government must also possess not only executive talents of a very high order, but he must be absolutely and wholly in the confidence of the secretary, and be unquestionably loyal to that official.

The late distinguished secretary of state, Hon. James G. Blaine, trained and educated his son Walker until that young gentleman became almost as necessary to the public life of his distinguished father as the air he breathed. In the great political and public world his son, Walker, was the only man upon whom the statesman could absolutely rely in every particular. From the day of the sudden death of his beloved son the life of James G. Blaine began to rapidly ebb away. Walker Blaine was the worthy son of his distinguished father.

Logan Carlisle, chief clerk of the treasury department is a competent man for the position to which he has been appointed, and it is fortunate for the secretary that he has a son upon whom he can rely for the administration of that important office. The new chief clerk is about thirty-two years of age. He was born in Covington, Ky., and received his preliminary education at the public schools in that town. He was also a student in the military academy of Washington, D. C., and of the law school of the university of Louisiana. Several years ago he commenced the practice of law in Wichita, Kan., with his brother, but gave it up temporarily to return to Washington and act as clerk for his father when he was speaker of the house of representatives. No young man could have a better education under any circumstances than by intimate association with the distinguished Kentuckian who has occupied so many prominent positions and filled them all creditably and well.

The office of the chief clerk of the treasury department is immediately below the room which is occupied by the secretary. The chief clerk is a very busy man indeed and his duties are multifarious. He has entire supervision of the department, is responsible for the furniture, and the expenditure of the appropriation for furniture not only in the treasury department proper but in the subordinate branches throughout the entire country; and all of the employes outside of the civil service classified lists are subject to appointment or removal by him. The pens, ink, paper, pencils, envelopes and everything used by the clerical force of the treasury department throughout the entire country, are purchased upon the order of the thief clerk. Whenever any division of the department is in need of material for the regular work before it, a requisition is made upon the chief clerk, and only by his approval can the material desired be obtained. He is directly responsible for the disbursement of over $2,000,000 per annum, and the secretary of the treasury can only intrust such responsibility, power and discretion to one in whom he has absolute confidence and of whose honesty and loyalty he is certain.

LOGAN CARLISLE, CHIEF CLERK TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Chief Clerk Carlisle is a tall, slender young man who is the possessor in great degree of the quality of firmness for which his father is distinguished. The ability to say "no" is one of the characteristics which are necessary to the incumbent of such a position. The pressure which it brought to bear upon the chief clerk of the department for appointments in the grades of watchmen, messengers, charwomen and other positions not affected by civil service law and rules, is very great indeed. It may seem surprising to you, but it is a matter of fact well known to every one in this city, that representatives and United States senators, laying aside the legitimate duties for which they have been elected by their districts and by the legislatures of their states, go to the treasury department and insist upon appointments of this kind being made.

The secretary of the treasury announced at the commencement of his administration that the law granting union veterans the preference would be observed and that union veterans would not be discharged from the department without cause. In spite of the fact that this announcement was made in the newspapers early in March urgent and earnest demands have been made for the removal of the incumbents of these places and the appointment of others to succeed them. It has been the duty of the chief clerk to carry out the will of the secretary in this regard, and he has done so in an admirable manner. While never rude or brusque, the chief clerk has been very positive and determined in his denials of these applications. From this it must not be affirmed that changes have not occurred in the personnel of the watch force and messenger roll, because for various reasons changes are occurring constantly.

During the past two months it has been almost impossible for the secretary of the treasury to transact public business as it should have been transacted, because he has been obliged to listen to the demands and appeals of seekers after the important offices under the control of the treasury department. If in addition to the demands for appointments as inspectors, collectors of customs, colectors of internal revenue, and other places paying $2,000 per annum and upward, the secretary of the treasury were obliged to listen to all of the demands for appointments in the subordinate places, his life would become one hideous nightmare in which office seekers would predominate. Fortunately, not only for the secretary of the treasury, but for the public welfare, the chief clerk is obliged to attend to that branch of the officeseeking business and is able to dispose of it with neatness and dispatch.

The chief clerk of the treasury department has never been popular with the heads of bureaus in the big department. When the comptroller of the currency, the solicitor general, the commissioner of customs, the commissioner of internal revenue, the register of the treasury, the auditors and other great men who have been appointed by the president, want anything they expect to have their wishes gratified. For example, suppose that the comptroller wants a new typewriter or a phonograph. He makes out a formal requisition for the article, sends it to the chief clerk and expects that official to stand and deliver at a moment's notice. Imagine, if you can, the surprise and indignation of the great man when he receives a note from the chief clerk informing him that the condition of the contingent fund of the treasury department is such that the purchase cannot be made. The great man proceeds to the office of the chief clerk in person, and accomplishes nothing. The official who is the custodian of the contingent fund explains that the appropriation is a limited one, and cannot be drawn upon too heavily at this season of the year, or it will not hold out. It has sometimes happened that high officials have gone directly to the secretary to secure an order for the honoring of their requisition; but even then they must fail. Upon one occasion a prominent official secured an order from Secretary Windom for a certain requisition and triumphantly carried it to the chief clerk, Maj. Brackett, who looked at it and said: "That order is of no value. The contingent fund is too low for that expenditure, and I will not obey the order." The high official went back to Secretary Windom with the report that the chief clerk would not obey his order. That astute statesman, who was always a man of peace, replied: "Well, if Brackett will not obey my order, I do not see what else we can do. He always was a self-willed fellow."

Secretary Windom knew his chief clerk, knew that he was right, and thus sarcastically ended the matter. The story soon traveled the rounds of the department, and no other bureau officer ever undertook to overrule the chief clerk in such matters. Logan Carlisle is capable of similar firmness, and of course has the confidence of the secretary. It is his duty to administer his office for the good of the entire service, and he will do it. But, as stated above, the chief clerks who have preceded him have not been very popular with the heads of bureaus. The present incumbent is an affable, polite, unpretentious gentleman, and will carefully guard the interests committed to his care, but, with all his evenness of temper and suavity, it is not likely that he can maintain entirely cordial relations with officials who want something all the time, when he must so frequently deny their wishes.

You want the Best

Royal Baking Powder never disappoints; never makes sour, soggy or husky food; never spoils good materials; never leaves lumps of alkali in the biscuit or cake; while all these things do happen with the best of cooks who cling to the old-fashioned methods, or who use other baking powders.

If you want the best food, Royal Baking Powder is indispensable.

Marking Handkerchiefs.

There is a decided effort preceptible to get away from the very ornate and illegible letters and monograms formerly so much employed. But the opposite extreme is reached when the name or initials are merely written in a running hand and outlined in the embroidery cotton, which practice, although certainly indulged in by a few, is hardly to be commended in comparison with the employment of simple, artistic forms. As a substitute for the satin stitch, if preferred, the letters may be outlined and filled in with French knots. For an ordinary set of plain handkerchiefs, a single initial, quite small and perfectly simple in form, is in excellent taste, and would form an easy beginning for those who are not yet very skillful or experienced in the work.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

HOT SPRINGS, SOUTH DAKOTA.

What Hon. Samuel W. Allerton Thinks of Them.

The Hon. Samuel W. Allerton, the noted capitalist of Chicago, arrived over the Burlington Route a few days since, and during an interview with a "Star" reporter said: "You people do not begin to realize what you have here in these waters. I have had the opportunity of traveling some over the United States and have visited a great number of its health resorts with springs which are claimed to have medicinal properties, but, in my opinion, you have water here that is superior to anything in this whole country, if not in the world, for the cure of rheumatic afflictions and diseases of the skin. My attention was first called to these springs by an intimate friend, Mr. Spencer, who owns a large cattle ranch west of here. He had a man on his ranch that was so badly afflicted with rheumatism that he was hauled here in a helpless condition. He was bathed in the old Indian bath for several weeks, and he went home entirely cured up, and I resolved that if ever I had rheumatism in my family, I would try Hot Springs, South Dakota. We brought Mrs. Allerton here as soon as she was able to come at all and I have found that all Mr. Spencer said in reference to the curative properties of the waters has been realized in my wife's case. She says she feels as though she has just been turned loose from a prison where she had been called upon to endure excruciating torture—every joint and muscle racked with pain so that life was a burden. No, I think Hot Springs' future is a grand one. Its air is pure and wholesome, its scenery lively and inspiring; sleep comes without any effort, and it is just the place for rest and building up a shattered constitution. You do not talk enough about the value of your waters for skin troubles. I, myself, received great benefit from them last year in a short visit there. Your climate makes you infinitely superior to the Arkansas Hot Springs, and in a country where so many thousand are afflicted with Rheumatism and other kindred ailments, if your advantages are made known, there is no question but that you will become the foremost health resort in the United States. We are delighted with our trip here and what your waters have done for us and will make frequent visits to your pleasant little city."—Hot Springs (S. D.) Star.

That Terrible Scourge.

Malarial disease is invariably supplemented by disturbance of the liver, the bowels, the stomach and the nerves. To the removal of both the cause and its effects Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is fully adequate. It "fills the bill" as no other remedy does, performing its work thoroughly. Its ingredients are pure and wholesome, and it admirably serves to build up a system broken by ill health and shorn of strength. Constipation, liver and kidney complaint and nervousness are conquered by it.

—Last week Ole Bockman was brought before Squire Walter on a charge of using abusive language. Mrs. Katie Wenzel was complaining witness. The suit was brought in the name of the village of Delano. A jury was called and failed to agree. A change of venue was then taken to Justice Catlin. The defendants attorney asked that security for costs be required. The motion was granted and complainant asked to give security for costs. Plaintiffs attorney stated that he would advise his client not to give security for costs, whereupon the case was dismissed, and the prisoner discharged.

Don,t forget the hour, it seems rather early these long summer evenings, 6:30. Be there shure, and don,t be afraid to express your opinions. Two vacancies on the Board of Education will be filled at that time. A great deal depends on the kind of men that fill these positions. If we desire to have high school pupils who know how to spell well enough to find what they wish to look up in an encyclopedia we should elect members of the board who will have some interest in the school and who will at least know what branches are taught and the methods of teaching them. Men who will, occasionally, visit the school, when in session, and by their presence, at least, encourage the teachers and pupils to greater efforts to pluck some of the fruit of the tree of knowlege. Don't fail to be prompt at 6:30. Don't loose your vote by coming late.

--The school treasurer, in his "organ of last week says of the school, meeting. "The treasurers report, notwithstanding extraordinary expenses for text books purchased during the year and renewal of $4,000 expired insurance for five years, and a reduction of two mills in the rate of tax the past year will show a balance in treasury of about $2,500, of which at least $1,500 is available for and ought to be set aside to create an interest bearing sinking fund. Great Scot! The same old treasurer has been making similar statements for the past ten years, and now here he comes again, The money spent for "text books" was in violation of the law. All the "sinking funds" if we ever had any that has been squandered for other purposes for more than ten years is in violation of the law. It is about time to take a change. If we don't, when will our $10,000 debt be paid? Great Financier this!

LATEST,--this week's Eagle says they were mistaken last week and the insurance renewed was $5,500 and the balance is $2,644.60

Numerous mention is made in our exchanges of petty thievings and robberies in many places throughout the state. The hoarding of wealth by those having it, acts as a stimulant to those desiring or needing it and they try unlawful means to acquire their share of the money.

It appears to us that some law should be made whereby Wright county could not confine a prisoner in jail and leave him to die, without medical aid, or, to have a Doctor attend him gratuitously. Our county is able to pay her just debts and should do so. Her special law in regard to caring for the poor is a failure, in many case, so far as those who attend to the poor getting anything for it goes, and should be abolished.

The midsummer Cosmopolitan, the first at the new price of 12½ cents per copy, though unchanged in size, excels any other issue of that magazine in the number of its distinguished contributors, in the interest of its contents and in its overflowing illustrations by famous artists. Francois Coppee, William Dean Howells, Camille Flamarian, Andrew Lang, Frank Dempster Sherman, H. H. Boyesen, Charles De Kay, Thomas A. Janvier, Colonel Tillman, Agnes Repplier, and Gilbert Parker are a few of the names which appear on its title page. Three frontispieces, all by famous artists, furnish an unusual feature, and among the artists who contribute to the 119 illustrations adorning its pages, are Raurens, Reinhart, Fenn, Toussaint, Stevens, Saunfer, Fittler, Meaulle and Franzen. The midsummer number is intended to set the pace for the magazine at its new price of 12½ cents a copy, or $1.50 a year. The magazine remains unchanged in size and each issue will be an advance upon its predecessors. Literally, every known country is being ransacked for material in the hope to bring the Cosmopolitan forward as the leading magazine in the world.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

A LITTLE FELLER.

Say, Sunday's lonesome fur a little feller,
With pop and ma'am a-readin' all the while,
An' never sayin' anything to cheer ye,
An' lookin' 's if they didn' know how to smile;
With hook an' line a-hangin' in the woodshed,
An' lots o'worms down by the outside cellar,
An' Brown's creek just over by the millidam,—
Say, Sunday's lonesome fur a little feller.

Why, Sunday's lonesome fur a little feller
Right on from sun-up when the day commences;
Fur little fellers don't have much to think of,
'Cept chasin' gophers 'long the cornfield fences,
Or diggin' after moles down in the wood-lot,
Or climbin' after apples what's got meller,
Or fishin' down in Brown's creek an' millpond,—
Say, Sunday's lonesome fur a little feller.

But Sunday's never lonesome fur a little feller
When he is stayin' down to Uncle Orn's;
He took his book onct right out in the orchard,
An' told us little chaps just lots o' stories;
All truly-true, that happened onct fur honest,
An' one 'bout lions in a sort o' cellar.
An' how some angels came an' shut their mouths up
An' how they never teched that Dan'el fellefler.

An' Sunday's pleasant down to Aunt Marilda's;
She lets us take some books that some one g'in her
An' takes us down to Sunday school t' the school house;
An sometimes she has nice shortcake fur dinner.
An' onct she had a puddin' full o' raisins
An' onct a frosted cake all white an' yeller;
I think, when I stay down to Aunt Marilda's,
That Sundays pleasant fur a little feller.

THE opening of the World's Fair on Suuday has not proven a paying move, consequently the management has decided not to open the grounds any more on that day.

OUR public schools have long been the pride of our nation. Here our children could go and without price, receive the rudiments of an education that would be of use, and a pleasure to them through life. How careful we should be to guard our Free Schools. To attend school meetings, and like proud American citizens deposit our votes on the various questions, some of them of almost vital importance to the system. How carefully we should select our members of the Board. Not because of their financial ability alone. Not because they belong to the same secret society. Not because they are members of the same church as ourselves, regardless of whether they have an interest in schools or not. But men who will attend school occasionally, and take an interest in schools, who have children to educate, and who care more whether a child is properly trained by competent teachers than they do for 5 cents worth of chalk or some similar financial interest. Unless teachers have visits from the Board, and some interest manisested in what they are hired for aside from to draw their pay, they will lose interest, and a poor school is the consequent.

HONESTY is an element which is much needed in politics. Honesty is respected by everyone. Everybody prefers to do business with a honest man, with a man who can look them in the face, with a man who they are not afraid will cheat or steel from them. When one approaches a railroad official he expects an honest answer to every one of his questions. When one asks a lawyer for advice he expects an honest answer. When one consults a physician he does so expecting to be told the truth and honestly advised. When one has business with a public official he has the same right to be delt honestly with, and the same right to expect honesty and gentlemanly treatment. A public officer should endeavor to do business for the public as he would for himself and in equally as honest and front manner. He should look out for the interest of the village, school district, county or state as he would for his own business. He should be no more pompous. Assume no more authority. He should understand the business entrusted to his case as fully as if it were his private affairs. He should expect as much from those having to do with him as if he were in his own store, shop or on his own farm, and no more. A man's word should count for the same in public affairs as in his own. The idea some appear to have that public business differs from their own so far that they can conscienciously overstep the bounds of honesty and rules of business is wrong, radically wrong and should be corrected.

THE Eagle says considerable about the good old Democratic times, and compares the prsent with them. It does look as if times now, under the McKinley bill and the Republican silver bill, neither of which have been repealed, were about as bad as they ever were. Howl good while you can, but don't lay the present times which are upon us in spite of your own party laws, to Democrats.

THAT letter of repentance, of A. J. Whiteman, formerly of Duluth, has a good ring to it. Of course those who are acquainted with the author can better judge of the likeness of the gentleman to keep his promise. If more men would repent of their past acts, and still others profit by the misspent poritions of many lives around them, the world would grow rapidly better. Let us hope that the ex-senator will keep his pledge.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 14, 1893.

Facts are stubborn things, and now that the democrats have an opportunity to examine the pension roll they are turning up every day to prove that the claim made by democrats for years, that millions of dollars were being paid out illegally for pensions, was correct. Cases are numerous where men are drawing $72 a month for total disability and are in addition following ordinary avocations and drawing the same salaries as uninjured men. Two cases of this sort turned up this week right here in Washington, one man a musician regularlarly employed and the other a government clerk, and there are many more here. These two men were re-examined and there pensions reduced to $17 and $23 a month respectively, and so apparent was the justice of the reduction that neither of them availed themselves of the right to appeal from the decision of the board of examiners.

A little incident occurred this week at the Pension Office which shows that politics do not enter into the present conduct of that office. A democratic congressman called to protest against the reduction of the pension of a prominent democratic worker in his district, and said that the man had influence enough to throw his district, which is close to the republicans. The papers in the case were produced and it was conclusively shown that the man was drawing a larger pension than he was entitled to, and the Congressman had to acknowledge it. although he still asked that this particular pension be not reduced. He was informed, as other democratic congressmen have been who called upon similar errands, that the policy of this administration was to administer the law as it exists without regard to the politics of the pensioners.

Secretary Morton thinks the work of the Weather Bureau should be confined to the purpose for which it was established and that the employment of high-salaried scientific experts to experiment along lines which nobody really knows anything about is all wrong, and in consequence of those thoughts he has notified several professors who have been engaged upon work that was of no immediate practical use either to the Bureau or to the public that their services will be dispensed with. The Secretary intends that the entire talent of the Bureau shall be devoted to improving the daily forecasts of the weather, which he believes to be the work which is the most beneficial to the public. "How the fur would fly," remarked a man who knew considerable about the inside workings of some of the other so called scientific bureaux of the government, "if a man like Morton were put in charge of the Geological and the Coast Survey offices. He knows enough about science not to allow himself to be bamboozled by the fake scientists whose sole object in life is to hold on to the soft snaps they now have."

Senator Vorhees, whose long Congressional experience makes his opinion valuable, takes no stock in the talk about the extra session being a short one. Speaking of it he said: "Congress will probably be in continuous session until August 15, 1894, if not longer. Representative Wilson, of West Virginia, the gentleman who is thought to stand the best chance of being the chairman of the Ways and Means committee of the House, should Mr. Springer not get it again, also thinks the extra session will run into the regular session and that the latter will be an unusually long one. Mr. Wilson thinks that the tariff will be taken up just as soon as the Ways and Maens committee is announced by Speaker Crisp, and it is expected that will be immediately after the House goes through the formality of re-electing Mr. Crisp Speaker.

Many misstatements haye been made concerning the alleged antagonism between the administration and the silver democrats in Congress. Representative Wheeler, of Abalama, is and has been for years a silver democrat, and this is the way he expressed his antagonism: "I have unbounded confidence in President Cleveland, Secretary Carlisle and the democratic party. Mr. Cleveland struck the key-note in his letter of acceptance when he demanded legislation which would give adequate money for our business needs, and also legislation which would insure the proper distribution of this money through the country. Under his wise leadership we shall be able to frame a measure which will be satisfactory to all the interests of our land."

LONG LAKE.

A few nights ago, the lower end of our village was the scene of a "scrap" between a veteran Yankee, a native of the Green Mountain State and a Scandinavian, a native of Sweden. It seems that the affair took place in the formers door yard and the Yankee true to the prestige of his race in fighting on his own soil, came out ahead, although in the matter of years he was much the senior of the Scandinavian adversary. The old Yankee was a resident of the vicinity of Buffalo, Minn., a few years ago.

She was a native of Nova Scotia. Upon her marriage in 1861 she accompanied her husband to the pioneer home he had previously prepared in Minnesota, on the shores of Long Lake. They were accompanied by David A. Lydiard and wife, the latter being Mrs. Dickey's sister. With the exception of a few short intervals the two sisters have resided in this vicinity every since, in the enjoyment of an unbroken affection for each other which had its beginning in childhood. Upon the approach of her last sickness, Mrs. Dickey had scarcely become reconciled to the loss of her only daughter, Mrs. Stewart, whose death occurred last September. She leaves a husband and four sons to mour her death. Her remains were carried to their final resting place in Union cemetery, and were accompanied by a large funeral prosession mostly of old friends and neighbors.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

PROF. DIMCHA, of Russia, now at the world's fair, says the country is great, but there is one thing that he cannot understand. It is the American woman. Ah, professor, but there are about 30,000,000 American men in the same predicament.

IT is noted that the college orators this year have shown a tendency to discuss live questions instead of abstract philosophical theories. This leaning toward practicality is gratifying evidence that the modern college labors to keep the student up to the times as well as to fill him with the lore of all the ages.

THE man who casts an apprehensive glance at the heavens, saying: "Real cyclone weather" or "I'll bet we'll catch it to-night," is the fellow who goes around the corner and asks the next man he meets: "Did you hear that the United States treasury was going to suspend payment?" The fool killer ought to have an assistant.

A FRENCHMAN has been experimenting with the gas and water pipes of Paris for telephonic intercommunication, and has succeeded in transmitting messages from house to house by using this medium. He attached one wire of a telephone to a faucet and the other to a gas jet, and used three bichromate batteries on his microphone.

ACCORDING to the Railway Age there were but 1,014 miles of new railway track constructed in the United States during the first six months of 1893 as against nearly 1,400 last year during the corresponding period. The probable new mileage for the year, according to the estimate of the Age, will fall short of 3,000, or less than any year since 1878.

SEYMOUR, the mind reader, says he is going to be buried alive at Chicago and remain entombed while a crop of barley is sown, matured and harvested over his grave. He will then emerge and place himself at the disposal of the dime museum trust. Don't shudder. The grave may be there and the barley may be there, but Mr. Seymour will be whiling the weary weeks away at some secluded farmhouse.

THE Niagara Falls system of electrical transmission of power has started up the advocates of compressed air as a rival motive energy. It is considered practicable to transmit ten thousand horse-power ten miles, in a thirty-inch main, at one hundred and thirty-two pounds per square inch, and with a loss of but twelve per cent. by the use of compressed air, and the efficiency of such a plant is placed at fifty per cent. with cold air and seventy-five per cent. when reheated. The system is to be tested thoroughly and on a large scale in competition with electricity at Niagara Falls.

IT is only within a few years that the wide effect of the warm, moist Pacific winds, called chinooks, has been known in British Columbia and Alaska. These winds, corresponding exactly to those that make England a fertile country in the latitude of Labrador, keep the snow melted from the plains at the eastern base of the Rockies, and they encourage a magnificent growth of root crops, oats and grass a thousand miles north of New York. Wheat does not do well and berries are small. The winters are biting cold, but dry, and the summer, though short, is so hot that vegetation comes out of the earth with a rush.

THE world's submarine cables now measure about 143,011 nautical miles, in 1,168 sections. Different governments control 833 sections, or 13,382 miles, France claiming 3,269 miles; Great Britain, 1,599; Germany, 1,579, and Italy, 1,027 miles. The remaining 335 cables, aggregating 129,628 miles, are owned by private companies. This great length of cable has been nearly all made on the banks of the Thames, but Italy now has a cable factory and France will soon have two. To lay and repair the cables requires the constant service of a specially equipped fleet of thirty-seven vessels of 56,955 tons.

SLAIN AT A CROSSING.

A Train Crashes Into a Street Car in Chicago, Killing Three Persons and Injuring Many.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Going at the rate of 30 miles an hour the New York express on the Chicago & Grand Trunk railroad ran into a heavily loaded South Halsted street car at Forty-ninth and South Halsted streets at 5:25 o'clock Monday afternoon. Three people were killed and ten injured seriously. Several people were slightly injured and the driver of the street car is supposed to be wandering about crazed by the calamity of the people in his charge. It is expected that at least one of the injured will not recover. Those dead are Grace Hunt, of La Salle, Ill; Thomas Perkins, 5531 Green street, and John Finn, a plumber, Chicago.

The south-bound Halsted street car, the open style, was crowded and men were standing on the footboards. It was in charge of Conductor Frank Barnett and Driver Charles Stalnecker. At Forty-ninth street is a network of tracks and the crossing has always been regarded as a dangerous one. A long freight train going west had just passed and the towerman, George Barnett, had raised the gates. This was taken as a signal that the way was clear and Stalnecker whipped up his horses as he started to drive across the tracks. Previously, however, Conductor Barnett, a son of the towerman, had gone ahead, and not being able to see the approaching passenger train because of the freight, he motioned the driver to go ahead.

As the car passed on the level 50 feet space between the two double tracks Barnett noticed a cloud of smoke arising above the freight train to the west. He told the driver, Stalnecker, to stop his horses. Stalnecker did not seem to understand him and whipped his team into a run to avoid the train he soon saw was upon him.

The team and forward part of the car had passed the last track in safety when the swiftly-moving train crushed into the rear end and platform. Many passengers had seen the train at the last moment and had tried to jump from the car. Conductor Barnett devoted his time to picking up women and children who fell from the car and was not on the car when the engine struck it.

The car, broken into many pieces, buried those who had been riding in it and as the passenger train plunged ahead there were many cries of pain and agony to be heard. Under the car was the body of a woman, identified as Miss Grace Hunt, and seriously injured. At one side was the mangled body of Finn, a plumber, supposed to be employed by Boyle. Finn's head was crushed and his body cut in two, probably by the cars. The other occupants of the open car were piled in a heap to the east of the wreck.

The Grand Trunk train of seven coaches, with Fireman William Campbell and Engineer T. A. Jones in charge, came to a stop within a train's length after striking the street car. As there was no occasion for slacking speed at the crossing the train was going rapidly, it is said at the rate of thirty miles an hour. Policemen from the Forty-eighth street station got on the cab of the engine after the accident and accompanied the engineer and fireman and allowed them to take their train into the depot. After that both men were taken back to the station and locked up.

In addition to the Grand Trunk engineer and fireman under arrest there were at the station last night and under arrest the street-car conductor and the flagman.

BY THE WHOLESALE.

Bank Failures in the West Multiplying Daily—On Monday There Were Six in the State of Kansas, Two in Kansas City and Three in Denver.

TOPEKA, Kan., July 18.—State Bank Commissioner Breidenthal was on Monday notified of the suspension of six state and private banks in Kansas, all due to the suspension of Kansas City banks in which they had deposits. The banks reported are the Bank of Johnson City, the Bank of Weir City, Hood & Kincaid's private bank of Pleasonton, Caney valley bank of Caney, Ritter & Doubleday's private bank of Columbus and the Bank of Meade of Meade Center.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 18.—The Missouri national bank, which was looked upon as one of the stoutest houses in the west, closed its doors at noon. Its assets are nearly $2,000,000, while its liabilities are only one-half of that figure. At 9:30 a. m. the Bank of Grand avenue failed for $250,000.

DENVER, Col., July 18.—The first bank failure in Denver since 1874 occurred Monday morning when the People's savings, the Colorado savings and the Rocky Mountain dime and dollar savings banks closed their doors. The assets of the People's savings bank are $1,500,000; liabilities, $1,350,000. The Colorado savings bank has assets over liabilities, it is claimed, amounting to $73,000. The assets of the Rocky Mountain dime and dollar savings bank are $156,803.53; liabilities, $105,654.32.

It is understood that all the assignments were preconcerted and the step was taken for self-protection and for the protection of the depositors. The direct cause of the failures was the universal hard times and the inability to realize on securities. The president of each bank declares that every depositor will be paid in full and that the institutions will resume.

Took the Law in Their Own Hands.

UNION CITY, Tenn., July 18.—At 12 o'clock Sunday night thirty armed men raided the city and visited a number of disreputable resorts, demolishing the houses and furniture and notifying the inmates to leave the city. Attempts to suppress these resorts by law have failed. Twelve years ago this city was similarly raided. Seven years ago a den of local thieves was broken up and seven hanged by a mob. Since then until recently the city has been noted for its purity. It has 5,000 inhabitants and is one of the most prosperous towns in the state.

WHO IS HE?

After Being Known for Years as Dan Benton a Demented Creature Claims to Be William Newby, and Is trying to Secure a Pension—Evidence in a Remarkable Case at Springfield, Ill.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., July 18.—The case of the United States vs. Daniel Benton, which is on trial in the federal court here, is one of the most remarkable that has ever been tried in Illinois, if not in the United States, and since the trial was entered upon the middle of last week it has been the principal topic of conversation in nearly all circles in this city. The case is a criminal prosecution against Daniel Benton, who is under indictment for personating William Newby, a union soldier who for a period of twenty-nine years was supposed to have been killed in the battle of Shiloh and buried on the field two days later by comrades. The prisoner is known as "Rickety Dan" Benton, and he is a physical wreck, and the story of this most romantic case is being unfolded in the trial.

The government, which rested on Friday last, examined forty or fifty witnesses and seemed to have made out an overwhelming case, but the defense is now proceeding, and matters are becoming decidedly mixed. The government first has Newby dead and buried; then it takes up the boy, "Rickety Dan" Benton, at the age of say 5, 6 or 8 years, with his mother, Lydia Benton. He is traced from White county, Ill., into Tennessee, where he and his mother were taken by one Andy Wooten. There Dan grew up, drifting away occasionally, but only for short periods. He was known to the people of the neighborhood, and so was his mother Lydia. Finally he was sent to the penitentiary at Nashville for horse stealing and remained there for twelve years. All this time he was Dan Benton. He left the penitentiary in 1889. Afterwards he was an inmate of many poorhouses in Tennesee, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois. In these he was registered as Dan Benton. There is no conflict of testimony as to these facts. They were proved absolutely.

In one of these poorhouses he seems to have become enamored of a female inmate, now known as Hannah Stewart. They left the institution together and became tramps. They did not marry, but she bore him two children. One of these was a son and was named Dan. He is "rickety" like his father. Both mother and son are here and testified for the government. The prisoner was always known to both as Daniel Benton. The mother visited Dan in the penitentiary from time to time, where he was, as elsewhere, Dan Benton. She furthermore testified that he told her that his mother's name was Lydia Lucinda Benton.

The theory of the defense is in brief that Newby was not killed and buried at Shiloh, as has been supposed by all who knew him for thirty years. He was only desperately wounded in the head and leg. He was taken by rebels from the field, and finally placed in Andersonville prison, where he became known as "Crazy Jack." In course of time he was released, a demented, "rickety" man. He became a wanderer and drifted about the country, an inmate of the poorhouses and of the Tennessee penitentiary, just as Dan Benton. Thus he passed his time for a quarter of a century until he finally got into the White county poorhouse. Then his reason partially returned and he came to realize that he was Newby. He went out among his old neighbors, and declared himself. He recognized old friends and talked in such a manner of old times that he convinced many of them. It must be so, they urged, for nobody but Newby would know things he spoke of. Some members of the Newby family, including his old wife, who had long been drawing a pension on his account, received him as genuine. Finally he himself made application for an original pension and then his troubles commenced. An investigation of his case resulted in establishing his identity to the satisfaction of the government officials as "Rickety Dan" Benton and his arrest and indictment followed.

Thus far the defense has examined sixty-five witnesses. They are Newby's relatives, old friends and comrades, and many of them are testifying very positively as to the identity of the prisoner. Most of them, but not all, knew Newby before the war. Those who had known him were called upon to describe his personal appearance at the time he enlisted in the army. They attempted to do so, but crossed each other a good deal. Some described him as a powerfully-built, sandy-complexioned man, which he was if his own brothers and sisters remember him right; others described him as a large man, with dark eyes, dark hair and dark complexion. The prisoner is tall, slender and very dark. Asked if they believed the prisoner at the bar to be Newby, all the witnesses declared that they did.

The prisoner, if he is really Newby, is understood to be entitled to a pension and arrearages amounting to about $22,000.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., July 18.—The most interesting testimony yet given for the defense in the Newby trial was given Monday by ex-union soldiers, some of whom had stood with Newby on the field of Shiloh and others who had seen a demented wreck in the prison of Andersonville, who was known as "Crazy Jack," and whom they unhesitatingly identified with the prisoner at the bar.

Beats the Pigeon Record.

CHICAGO, July 18.—One of the pigeons let loose on the world's fair grounds at 10:10 o'clock last Saturday morning reached its home about 1,000 miles away at 7:18 a. m. Monday. The bird is one of thirty-seven owned by the Empire City Flying club whose headquarters is at Thomas Clark's farm, Ozone Park, L. I. The bird's flight—nearly 1,000 miles in 46 hours, 8 minutes—is said to be the most successful in the annals of the sport. The bird wins a gold medal and $50 and the second and third birds will get medals and smaller cash prizes. Another lot of forty-eight birds was loosed at 10 a. m.

Watermelon for a Million.

TACOMA, Wash., July 18.—Twenty thousand watermelons are to be cut in one day at the world's fair when Washington state's "tallest flagstaff on earth" and the state building are dedicated in September. The melons, with a lot of Washington peaches, prunes and other fruit are to be sent by a special fast freight train over the Northern Pacific road to Chicago, and when the watermelons are cut everybody in sight will be invited to partake. It is estimated that the melons will cut up into 1,000,000 pieces of over half a pound each.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Set the Fire.

The suspicions which some people had at the time of the big Bradstreet-Thurber fire in the Syndicate block, Minneapolis, June 6, that the fire was of incendiary origin, have at last been confirmed and the firebug discovered in the person of a little 15-year-old colored boy who was employed by Bradstreet, Thurber & Co. to run the passenger elevator.

On June 6, the date of the big fire, Johnny went to his dinner at 12 o'clock and failed to put in an appearance again until between 3 and 4 in the afternoon. When he did return, Mr. Heywood requested that he be more prompt in his time. This was the first and only time the lad was ever rebuked. When the fire was discovered Johnny was lost in the shuffle for some time. A few days afterwards he was arrested for a bungling job of forging some small checks, waived examination and was bound over to the grand jury, by which body he was indicted. He pleaded guilty to that charge and was sentenced to the reform school at Red Wing, to which place he was taken by the sheriff on July 1, and where he now is.

The matter was placed in the hands of a detective, who by the aid of a cell mate of Singleton, secured a confession of the crime.

Bold Robbers.

A daring robbery was effected at Forest Lake recently. Four men called at the saloon conducted by C. B. Smith and two entered the place, while the others were stationed at the doors as sentries. Upon entering, the men, who were masked, called upon the barkeeper and a couple of customers to turn their faces to the wall, the demand being enforced at the point of revolvers. They then rifled the cash drawer of $130 and took $36 from the register, after which they called upon the customers to disgorge. From one of the latter, an old man, they took $60 in gold, all the money he had, and he begged them to leave him something, but without avail. After securing a revolver belonging to the barkeeper they escaped.

His Record.

Louis P. Schoonmaker, who was arrested at Winona for forgery, is an old hand at the business. Some seven years ago he committed forgeries at Winona, Rochester, Owatonna, La Crosse and Sparta. He was captured and served two years at Waupun, and upon release was brought to Winona tried and given two more years at Stillwater. While there the Prison Mirror was founded and he was the first editor of that paper. Upon his release he went to La Crosse, indulged in a roaring drunk and made off with a horse and buggy. He was again arrested, this time for horse theft, and given two more years at Waupun. He will undoubtedly be given another term at Stillwater for his latest escapade.

Fatal Accident.

While the 3d U. S. infantry, which is in camp at Lakeview, were having parade, a very serious accident took place. A carriage containing Mrs. C. W. Smyth and daughter Julia, of Lake City, and Miss Ada Miller, of St. Paul, were crossing the railroad track adjacent to camp, when the Wabasha local train struck them, throwing the occupants several yards. Mrs. Smyth was most seriously hurt having the abdominal wall cut and several minor injuries. The young ladies, however, remained unhurt. The artillery, which was close at hand, instantly dispatched a courier to Surgeon Fitzgerald, who had them removed to the hospital. The cause of the accident consisted in the horse stopping dead still and refusing to budge. Mrs. Smyth died soon after reaching the hospital.

Itasca's Pine Lands.

Gov. Nelson has appointed Senator Dedon, of Taylors Falls, to reassess the pine lands in Itasca county. The appointment is under the official act of the last legislative session. The county auditor of Itasca county made a sworn statement that the assessed value of the pine lands was below the actual value, hence the appointment. Senator Dedon will be required to report before Jan. 1, 1894. Senator Dedon is also a cruiser for the pine land investigating committee. He stated recently that his committee has done nothing as yet, but are waiting for cooler weather, when the investigation will be pushed rapidly.

News in Brief.

Carl Johnson, a shoveler on the Great Northern gravel train, was knocked from the cars at Crookston by the train making too sudden a start. It ran over his left arm, which was badly crushed, besides being badly bruised otherwise. He is 50 years old and has a family at Lunden, Minn.

Members of the Chippewa Indian commission have been investigating matters at Cloquet. They found between 150 and 200 on the annuity rolls that should not be there. Between $9 and $10 have been drawn on account of each of these names for several years past.

Ed. Orbeck, a Minneapolis saloonkeeper, had $500 stolen from his vest while absent from the room for a few moments.

Burglars broke into Hansen, Sverdsen & Co.'s store at Alden, blew open the safe and took about $200 in cash and all the notes and papers.

Arthur T. Carter, a traveling salesman for Tarbox & Schliek, committed suicide at the Merchants hotel, in St. Paul, by shooting himself through the head. He was married and of temperate habits. No cause is known for the act.

Hyslop Bros., general merchants at Fulda, were closed on five writs of attachment and forced to assign; liabilities about $8,000.

Erick Jenson, a section hand, died at Canby from the effects of sunstroke.

Frank Kranz, a 11-year-old boy of St. Paul, was arrested for stealing a horse and buggy, the property of A. H. Chester.

After fighting his way on the train for 100 miles, the officers at Little Falls took Royle Q. Lucas from the trucks of an eastbound express train, and on complaint lodged against him by the crew, is being held for trial. He carries a furlough signed by Capt. Brinekee, of Fort Canby, Wash., which the officers think has been stolen. He used a large knife to intimidate the train crew.

Telephone connection has been established between Beaver Falls and Renville.

Wm. Riley, son of John Riley, was drowned while bathing near Stillwater.

JEPTHA JUST WOULDN'T.

Another Little Disagreement in the Jones Family.

"Jeptha," remarked Mrs. Jones, looking up from the society column she was reading, "it's all the fashion now to write your name with a hyphen."

"What's a hyphen?" asked Jones, suspiciously.

"Why, Jeptha, I'm sure you ought to know what a hyphen is."

"Oh, I suppose it's one of those newfangled stylographic pens that make your handwriting look like sign-painting."

"Mr. Jones, a hyphen is——"

"I know, Maria. My grandmother used to drink it. There was old Hyson and young Hyson——"

"Mercy me, Mr. Jones, that was a tea—this is a hyphen—a dash——"

"Well, Maria, we're not going to begin at our time of life to cut any dash. I don't want any in mine."

"But you don't understand, Jeptha."

"Yes, I do understand Jeptha, and he ain't going to cut up any monkeyshines with a hyphen or a dash, not if he knows himself, and he thinks he do."

"Wouldn't you like to write your name Jeptha Jone-Jones?"

"Well, not much. Plain Jones is good enough for me.

"You'll be plain Jones, then," said Mrs. Jones, spitefully; "all the society people are doubling their names to make them more stylish. There's the Brown-Browns, and the Smith-Smiths."

"And you'd like to have a fool-Jones, but I ain't going to begin driving tandem with my name at this late date."

"But you see, Jeptha, the hyphen links us with the social world—"

"Social grandmother! It will be the missing link in the family. Why, Maria, have you clean lost your senses? Isn't Mrs. Jeptha Jones good enough for you?"

"I can write that with a hyphen, I suppose," suggested Mrs. Jones.

"Write it with a hyphen or a section of stovepipe, or the hose, Maria, but for goodness sake don't try to ape people who have more money than brains," said Jeptha.

"I'm no ape," retorted Mrs. Jones, having the last word in the dispute.—Detroit Free Press.

SPECIFIC TEACHING.

"Just as the Twig is Bent the Tree Inclines."

In a recent address to teachers and children, Miss Willard spoke as follows:

"My left-handedness furnishes an illustration that I have often used, of the imperious law of habit. Mother always thought me to be not naturally defective in this way, but that the difficulty was superinduced by a girl who helped take care of me, and who, being left-handed herself, took special pains to train me in the same direction. However this may have been, mother determined to break it up, and would take my little hand, wind it loosely in white cloth, bound on securely at the wrist and make me go like that day after day. I remember well, though I could not have been more than three or four years old, the misery I felt in being crippled thus, and the pains I took to keep that hand behind me. Meanwhile, as time went on mother sedulously placed table-knife, pencil, needle and scissors in my right hand, teaching me how to hold them, and to this day I never use these things with my left hand and could not without positive discomfort. But this was before the day of silver forks, at least at our house, and I can not hold one comfortably save in the left hand. She did not think that I should develop into an accomplished Brother Jonathan jack-knife whittler, so no education was given on that subject, and my lead pencil whittling must be done with the left hand or not at all. She did not think that I should ever become a gesturer and I am so left-handed at this exercise as often to be accused after a speech of the very disability against which my faithful mother strove so earnestly. Now, since we are such prisoners of our early training, let me here point a moral by imploring every mother who reads this to teach her boys and specifically, the rules of life that she would have them know for health, for helpfulness and happiness and that she desires them to transmit to their posterity:"—Union Signal.

THE EARLY RISING GIRL.

How sweet the flowers
In morning hours:
  How fresh the day and fair;
And silver bright,
The sun's glad light
  Shines radiant everywhere.

I see the rose,
Which lightly blows,
  Nod greeting to the day,
And lilies white
Bend to the light,
  Which riseth from the gray

The birds and bees,
From flowers and trees,
  Their matin music bring;
And song and hum
In measures come,
  Attuned to everything.

Then from her throne,
She cometh lone,
  The new day to adorn,
This early one,
To meet the sun—
  A goddess of the morn!

A PLANTATION HUNT.

Seven Fat Coons Were Captured After a Weary Tramp.

"There are several things necessary for a successful coon hunt," said my friend, Joe Wood, lighting another one of my Havanas and rocking himself vigorously back and forth in the worn hide-bottomed chair that occupied the coolest corner of our boarding house piazza. "To begin with, it must be a good coon year—that is, the animals must have good luck in raising their young, the persimmons must have fruited heavily, and, last of all, there should be a light flurry of snow to bring them out into the open and give the hounds a chance. If you care for a little sport," he continued, in his pleasant southern drawl, "there are plenty of the little pests in the forests of Ingleside."

One morning Wood lounged into the office and proposed an immediate trip to his home. Nothing loath, I hastily disposed of books and briefs, and turning the key in my office door we two sallied forth together. All day we traveled through rifled corn and cotton fields, dark, moss-hung swamps and somber pine forests, for Wood lived almost in the heart of Effingham county, and it was evening when we stopped at the little log station deep in the heart of the pine lands. A darky, exceedingly black and ragged, and wholly unintelligible (to me) as to speech, mounted on a mule and leading two others, were the only living things in sight.

"All right, thisser way," said Wood, falling quite naturally into the dialect of the rice fields.

The road to Wood's plantation led partly through a somber pine forest and partly through a sort of marshy field. It was quite dark when we came in sight of the long, low, wooden building, and the red firelight that flashed through its many windows was a cheerful sight to the weary traveler.

There was no one in sight to welcome Wood save a superannuated old negress, extremely broad of person and glib of tongue, who informed us that "Miss Ginny and her mah done gone toe bade, 'kase dey warn't 'spectin' no comp'ny, let 'lone gen'lemen."

Wood cut her short by ordering her to produce whatever the house afforded in the shape of supper, and led the way into the room through whose windows the firelight shone most brightly. This room was long and low ceiled, its walls covered almost with pictures hung in what at first seemed wild confusion—engravings, oils and chromos all finding space and lending a peculiar home-like charm to the room.

Upon the table a long-necked mandolin jostled several books of poems and a few well-worn novels, and a long, soft, white shawl trailed from the back of the hide-bottomed chair in which Wood ensconced himself, signing me to take the other at the opposite side of the wide, open fireplace.

The rank odor of frying bacon soon pervaded the room and shortly after an old negro, as dried and withered as the negress was the reverse, entered with the hastily-prepared supper. The crispy fried bacon strips, the odor of which had assaulted our olfactories some moments before, floating in a little sea of grease, some nicely browned corn pone still bearing the impress of old Dinah's three pudgy digits on the upper crust, and some roasted yams, with large cups of extremely strong black coffee, completed the meal.

The next day set in dismal and rainy, and as we were not to hunt until the shades of evening were falling I decided to remain for the present before the huge fireplace, basking in the warmth of a royal hickory fire and in the presence of Miss Regina Wood.

Lovely and languid to a degree, this young woman seemed to have no more occupation in life save that of swaying gently to and fro in a huge hide-bottomed rocker and admiring her own lovely rose-tinted hands. She passed the time in neither reading nor strumming on the piano, nor in the tiresome occupation of fancy work, the manufacture of which seems to be the delight of so many women.

Toward night old Si began his preparation for the hunt, and after supper we sallied forth. There were neither guns nor ammunition in the party, but old Si carried several fat pine torches, a sharp, new ax, and each hunter was armed with a stout stick.

Wood, old Si and myself, together with two other young rich planters, made up the party, between whom there were twenty-five hounds, of every color and breed, and as we marched over field and through woods their baying seemed to warn their canine friends that the fun was up, for hounds from every direction seemed to gather and join the hunt, until it seemed that the whole woods was alive with their eager, lean bodies.

We traveled what seemed to me several miles through bush and briar. The soles of my boots were polished smooth as glass from treading on the pine needles, and I was well-nigh exhausted before the first game was treed. The hounds gathered at the base of a sturdy hickory sapling, and such an infernal music as they kept up until we arrived it was never before my lot to hear.

"Dey is treed one, bless Gawd! dey is treed one!" called out old Si, and running forward he beat off the dogs and applied his ax to the tree with quick resounding strokes. But the old darky had only his trouble for his pains, for just as the tree was about to fall the little animal sprang to the ground and scampered into the swamp, the hounds in full chase at his heels. When treed again the 'coon was found to be in quite a large tree, and old Si hesitated to attack it with his ax.

"Here you, William Washington Wilkes White," he called to a very small, ragged and extremely black boy, who had joined us somewhere on the road, "you shin up dis swee' gum an' git dat 'coon!"

William Washington Wilkes thus admonished ran forward and "shinned" up into the branches, which he began to shake vigorously. Inexperienced in hunting coon, I expected to see the animal shaken from its perch immediately, but I was sadly disappointed, for he was dislodged only after a tedious fight and took refuge in a smaller tree, which Si readily felled. No sooner had it struck the ground when the hounds hustled in and pounced upon the victim, but were quickly beaten off by the old negro. The 'coon already seemed quite dead, its body apparently crushed by the strong teeth of the dogs, but to make sure the old man gave it several blows with the big end of the stick, and tucked him safely away in his sack.

Shortly afterwards the party became separated, old Si, William Washington Wilkes and myself remaining together. Onward we marched until becoming hopelessly involved in a cane brake, which seemed to me impenetrable, the old darky paused and observed: "I clar ter Gawd I dunno whicher way ter go. Kayn't year de dogs an' I kayn't see de sky. I 'specs we uns 'll hab ter wait twel somefin' turns up an' de dogs come long back disser way."

Nothing loth to wait until morning if need be in preference to wandering about in the swamp all night, I found the dryest seat possible, while the old negro divested himself of bag and ax and proceeded to kindle a fire of the moss and leaves. Throwing ourselves down in its genial warmth, William Wilkes Washington soon fell fast asleep and snored lustily.

"We ain't had much luck wid coons," observed Old Si, drawing our one catch from the bag, "but dissher one's powerful fat," and in a trice the animal was divested of his fur and other accessories and was grilling before the blaze.

"I 'spect hit'll be nigh about mawnin' fore we gets home, an' a leetle snack 'll sorter hope breakfus," he explained. The odor of the sizzling fat ripping on the coals aroused William Washington Wilkes, who was instantly awake, his mouth watering in anticipation of the savory feast.

"You is jess lak de pore sinner when he is put in de debbil's hot hole," apostrophized old Si, looking at the sizzling coon.

"De sinner can fool de old debble an' git outen he clutches as long as he in dis worl, but when the debbil git 'im in his big pot an' he begin to stew an' fry, den hit be too late. De debbil got um too fas' fur 'scape, same's we un's got dis coon aswizzlin' over de coals."

When day began to break the old man gathered his traps together and led the way out of the swamp. A tramp of six weary miles brought us once more to Ingleside, where we found the rest of the party had been more successful than we. They captured six fat 'coons, and we ate them, garnished with sweet 'taters, for dinner. They proved very savory eating, worth the trouble to come by it, but I always think with inexpressible weariness of the night I went a-hunting of the coon. —Philadelphia Times.

DAVID CROCKETT'S QUANDARY.

The Great Man Was in Doubt as to Whose Pardon He Ought to Beg.

The following is old, and we recollect seeing it in print years agone, but it will bear rewriting and printing over again:

David Crockett, while at Washington visiting a menagerie which opened there for exhibition, and stopping before the cage of a huge baboon, exclaimed, after gazing awhile upon the grotesque quadrumana:

"Bless me! That fellow looks exactly like Tom ——, of Alabama," naming an honorable member of congress from that state, then on duty in Washington.

"Sir!" sounded an indignant voice at his elbow.

Davy turned and beheld, with a lady upon either arm, the very member whom he had likened to the baboon.

"Really, sir," said Crockett, "I had no idea that you were so near. Had I known it I shouldn't have spoken as I did."

The honorable member was irate, and in language slightly tinctured with threatening, demanded an apology.

"Oh! certainly," replied David, good-naturedly. "I am ready to apologize. Yes, yes—but"—and he looked from the honorable member to the animal in the cage and from the animal back to the honorable member, who, by the way, had never been deemed a handsome man—"really, I don't know which I ought to apologize to—you or the baboon!"—N. Y. Ledger.

A Yankee Translation.

Some years ago a remarkable name appeared on the programme of a concert given by the band of the academy at West Point. The bandmaster had sent to the adjutant a list of the pieces to be performed, that copies might be made from it.

The first selection on the programme was the overture, "Feisenmuhle," the English of which is "Mill on the Rock." The adjutant, who was a downright Yankee, and had a firmly-rooted objection to all foreign tongues, made a "free translation" into English, so that, as he said, "folks could have some idea what they were hearing."

The band-master's disgust can easily be imagined when he read as the first number on the printed programme:

1. Overture: "The Fenced-in-Mule," Reissiger.

Undoubtedly the adjutant thought everyone present could understand the general design of such an overture, even if unfamiliar with the workings of a German composer's mind.—Youth's Companion.

Not So Smart as He Thought.

A gentleman had his pocket picked of his purse in the waiting-room of a railway station and determined to have his revenge. Accordingly he put in his pocket an old leather purse containing but a scrap of paper on which were written these words: "Sold for once, you scamp!" and proceeded to the same station at the busiest time of the day and waited with the full intent of giving in charge the first pickpocket who might come his way. Twenty minutes passed. Tired of waiting, he started to go home, but first he thought he would see if the purse was all right. He opened it, and oh! stupefaction! instead of the white paper which he had inserted there was a piece of blue paper on which were the words: "What a silly joke!" written in pencil.—Intransigeant.

THE PUBLIC PRINTER.

He Has to Do a Good Deal of Work for Small Pay.

Origin, Growth and Present Proportions of the Government Print Shop—Four Million Required to Run It for Twelve Months.

[Special Washington Letter.]

"I presume that there comes a time in the life of every lawyer when he entertains an ambition to be a judge," says ex-Senator Moody, of South Dakota. It may probably also be truthfully said that there comes a time in the life of every printer in this country when he entertains a desire or an ambition to secure employment in the government printing office at the national capital.

The public printer is at the head of a great institution which employs over three thousand men and women. The government printing office is a hive of industry, and, because of the fact that the employes in this great printing house are not under the protection of the civil service law, there are applicants for employment on hand in person every day either accompanied by their representatives or senators, or bearing letters from men of standing and influence. The office of the public printer, which is upon the second floor of the building, is the most attractive camping ground in the city for the unemployed.

It costs nearly $4,000,000 to pay the yearly expenses of this institution. Over $2,000,000 are paid out annually to the employes in wages, while the quantities of materials consumed by the government printing office are almost staggering in their volume. Last year 223 printers' reams of paper were used, costing over $600,000. There were also ten tons of printers' ink, twelve tons of glue, six tons of twine, two tons of glycerine, two tons of antimony, one ton of bar tin, one-half ton of plumbago, 800 pounds of pumice stone and 720 pounds of beeswax consumed in the regular business of the government printing office; and there were also 6,000 gallons of oil, 4,500 gallons of benzine, 140 gallons of alcohol, 3,600 packs of gold leaf, 4,000 pieces of book cloth, 3,000 dozen Turkey morocco skins, 230 square feet of calfskin, 4,000 yards of crash, 4,000 dozen sheepskins and 40,000 feet of Russia leather consumed in the regular business. It is claimed by many that the government printing office in Washington is the biggest on the face of the earth. From the expense account epitomized above one would judge that there is some ground for that claim.

It is not generally known, but it is a fact that the big building at the corner of North Capitol and H streets, in which over 3,000 men and women are employed, is a veritable fire trap and a gigantic tinder-box. If a fire should occur in any part of the building a fearful holocaust would result. Three years ago congress appropriated $250,000 for the purchase of a site and the erection of a new building for the government printing office; but real estate dealers in this city have managed, by active and energetic competition, thus far to prevent the selection of any site, and the old death-trap continues in use. In the basement of the building are 75 huge printing presses, while on the floor above there is an immense complement of binding machinery, appliances and fixtures capable of turning out, in phenomenally short time, the greatest jobs of printing that can possibly be projected. In the basement and on the ground floor are the press rooms, paper warerooms safety vaults and machine shops. On the second floor are the administrative offices, the main composition room, the job rooms, the stereotyping and electrotyping departments and proof rooms. On the third floor is the bindery and its warerooms. The fourth story is devoted to the publication of the Congressional Record, patent office specifications, and to the necessary warerooms. In addition to the numerous force of printers, compositors, pressmen, stereotypers and book-binders, there are whole battalions of feeders, computers, helpers, assistants, machinists, engineers, messengers, watchmen and laborers. Most of the computers, feeders and assistants are women and girls, numbering about 1,000 in all, who earn a competence by their labor. In addition to this great central printing office there are five branches under the supervision of the public printer, and they are located for convenience in the treasury, interior, navy, state and war departments for work requiring special secrecy and discretion in those departments.

During the last session of congress a joint committee of both houses undertook to cut down the expenses of the government printing office by recommending the discontinuance of certain publications, but the congress did not act favorably upon the reports of the committee. As a matter of fact the congress is exceedingly extravagant in its orders for printing. One hundred copies of every bill introduced in either house of congress are printed and sent to the secretary and clerk of the senate and house to be placed upon their files. As a matter of fact ten copies would be ample for official use. Thousands of copies of reports of committees are printed from day to day during sessions of congress which should never be put into type. The committees of the senate and the house having before them bills for consideration very frequently make reports favorable or unfavorable for the purpose of satisfying the demands of claimants and lobbyists who make daily personal appeals for action upon their bills. As a matter of fact no reports should be made in any cases unless action can be had by both houses of congress. Then there are thousands of reports of the executive department printed which might as well remain upon the archives of the departments in type-written form, because their publications serve no public good. During the closing days of the last session of congress Representative Stockdale, of Mississippi, advocated the increase of the number of copies of the Congressional Record donated to each representative from twenty-two to forty-four daily. It was shown by the chairman of the committee on printing that the adoption of the proposition would carry with it a $95,000 increase, and the debate upon the subject grew very warm. The proposition, however, was finally rejected. If carried it would have resulted in the practical waste of $95,000 per annum.

The common people of the country are not interested in the excessive publication of the Congressional Record. It is a very fine thing to have, bound and indexed at the public expense for the use of statesman and newspaper men, and it makes a handsome addition to the library of a gentleman. But if five copies were daily given to each member of congress, instead of twenty-two, it would be sufficient for the statesmen; and if they needed more to send to the various people in their districts they could purchase and pay for them out of their own pockets.

The present government printing office was not founded until 1861 when Mr. John D. Defrees, of Indiana, was appointed the public printer by President Lincoln, after congress had worried along with other less convenient and satisfactory systems since the government was established in 1789. For many years the public printing was done on a small scale, the house and senate each paying for their own work out of their "appropriations for contingent expenses." For about twenty years prior to 1846 the senate and house elected public printers who were salaried officials. The duties of these officers were to make economical contracts and audit accounts for such printing only as was absolutely necessary. In that year, 1846, when the annual expense of congressional printing reached the enormous sum of $65,000, it was decided to return to the original contract system. But in 1851 the public printing cost $500,000, and the office of "superintendent of public printing" was created by act of congress, with a salary of $3,000 per annum. Strange as it may now appear, Horace Greeley was an applicant for the position, and so was Henry J. Raymond; both of them destined to become the leading journalists of their day, and one of them a candidate for the presidency of the republic.

The law of 1861, creating the office of public printer, is still in force, and under the system then commenced the government printing office has grown to the present proportions. The salary, which is $4,500, is very small, and no superior man could be induced to accept the office but for the honor of the position. The public printer gives bond in the sum of $100,000 and is obliged to abstain from any connection with or interest in any printing, binding, lithographing or engraving establishment; so that the entire time, attention, ability and energy of the public printer must be given to the government for $4,500 per annum. And yet, the duties and responsibilities of the place require the services of a man who is possessed of as much executive ability as would be required of the incumbent of a cabinet position.

The public printer must be a man of absolute incorruptibility and sterling integrity. If he is not, he is always in danger of misdirection; for the temptations of the position are very great. The following story is illustrative: "I do not like that man," said Capt. Meredith, chief of the bureau of engraving and printing three years ago, as we passed a prominent character on the avenue. "It was supposed early in '89 that I would be appointed public printer. That man came to me and asked to be appointed chief clerk of the government printing office, saying he would make me rich if I gave him that position. When I asked how he could do it, he said that, as chief clerk, he would make all contracts for materials for the office, and that he would occasionally hand me an envelope with a thousand dollars in it; and that I need not ask any questions. He had been introduced to me only a week before by an ex-member of a cabinet, and I had presumed that he was a gentleman. I have never permitted him to speak to me since that day."

The above is a true story. It illustrates pointedly and practically the dangers of the position, unless a man is armed so strong in honesty that he is absolutely incorruptible.

Baking Powder is absolutely pure. No other equals it, or approaches it in leavening strength, purity, or wholesomeness. (See U. S. Gov't Reports.) No other is made from cream of tartar specially refined for it and chemically pure. No other makes such light, sweet, finely-flavored, and wholesome food. No other will maintain its strength without loss until used, or will make bread or cake that will keep fresh so long, or that can be eaten hot with impunity, even by dyspeptics. No other is so economical.

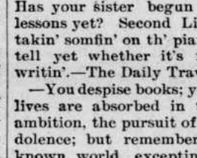
THE WEAKEST SPOT



in your whole system, perhaps, is the liver. If that doesn't do its work of purifying the blood, more troubles come from it than you can remember.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts upon this weak spot as nothing else can. It rouses it up to healthy, natural action. By thoroughly purifying the blood, it reaches, builds up, and invigorates every part of the system.

For all diseases that depend on the liver or the blood—Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness; every form of Scrofula, even Consumption (or Lung-scrofula) in its earlier stages; and the most stubborn Skin and Scalp Diseases, the "Discovery" is the only remedy so unfailing and effective that it can be guaranteed.

Purity and activity of the circulation are insured by it, and it effectually counteracts tendencies to kidney disease, rheumatism, neuralgia and gout.

DELANO DIARY

—Hemp twine 8 cents at John Coolen's.

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

--Champion binders and mowers, the best in the world at John Coolen's.

—A party of young people enjoyed a social hop at Mrs. Roehl's Wednesday evening.

—An Uncle Tom's Cabin company will show in Delano July 26, under a large canvas.

—The Delano Furniture Co. shipped a baby buggy to Theodore Klick, Ft. Benton, Montana, this week.

--John Coolen Jr.. ascertained the fact that a "safety" won't run over a big dog without spilling the rider.

—Rasberries are not very plentiful this year but what few there are are finding ready sale at 10 @ 12½ cents per quart.

—Demorests Magazine is up to the times. Magazine literature appears to be improving with every issue of the leading monthlies of our land.

—Remember the entertainment to be given by the Methodist people next Tuesday evening. Supper and ice cream will be served after which a short program will be rendered.

—There is getting to be quite a number of bicycles in town. Among the less graceful performers are John Lohmiller and Duke Hansman. Duke rides a high one.

—T. H. Kinsman, of Hamline, representing the United States Life Insurance Company, is spending a few days in Delano this week looking after the interest of our citizens.

—J. M. Gott and O. L. Billings went to Waverly Tuesday to interview a committee of the Albion band in regard to the next band tournament which will be held Aug. 2.

—COKATO, Minn., July 18.—Elof Holmberg was to-day convicted of selling whiskey contrary to law and was fined 25 and costs, or thirty days in jail. He appealed to the dsstrict court.—Globe.

—On Tuesday while engaged in unloading a binder near Mel Powers' place in Rockford, Will Jacobs had the misfortune to catch his index finger of the left hand in some gearing and severely lacerate it. He drove home for surgical care.

—Len Dedrick has sold his saloon business to Fautsch Bros., who will take possession Sept. 1. Len expects to begin the erection of a fine brick veneered building next to the alley on Rail Road Avenue in the same block, for a hotel and saloon.

—Miss Stella Jacobs is becoming quite an efficient entomologist. She obtained some very rare specimens of the "type louse" at our office a few days ago which she prizes very highly but claims that she had great difficulty in mounting them.

—The "Time Sayer" a book which names and locates 5,000 things at the World's Fair, that visitors should not fail to see is on our table. Thanks, to W. E. Hamelton, publisher. These books can be purchased for 25 cents each.

--No town in the state is receiving more free or unenviable advertising than Litchfield this summer. Every other town seems bent on hitting her trouble with the license question. She seems to bear up well under the burden, however.—Litchfield News Ledger.

—We understand that M. E. Sunday school is held in the Hitzman school house every Sabbath at 10 a. m., followed immediately by church services, conducted by Rev. Norman Batdorf. Mr. B. is quite a good speaker and will furnish his audience with food for meditation.

—We have been urging, frequently, that the contract made on taking out liquor license should be kept, inviolate, and have been quoting the law on different points. Now we hear that someone has been violating his license by selling to old drunkards, and there will probably be a suit brought, in the near future for this offense.

—It is currently reported that one of our city officers expressed himself, recently, that the council could stop gambling on the street but could not go inside the house to do so! Why not stop drinking outdoors as well as gambling out doors? Kind of a queer notion that. A soap vender was stopped for want of a license. He ought to sell only indoors.

—There is talk of two or three more saloons being started in Delano soon. Of course every license taken out swells the village treasury $500. But we don't see the use of a license when the miner children and wards of the bondsmen carry beer by the bucketful every day through the principal streets. It looks as if the $500 is all our "city dads" are after, law or no law, and this is a Republican council too.

—Brick $8 per 1000 at John Coolen's.

—If you need lime, call on John Coolen. 27.

—If you want brick go to John Coolen's.

—Mrs. M. J. Mulford is having her store and residence reshingled.

—Wallace King, one of Waverley's rustlers was doing business here yesterday.

—A. W. Wittman's drug store is dawning a new coat of paint. His sign is also being repainted.

Hi Herrington hauled a bran new wagon home with him one day this week.

—About 30 of Miss Tillie Coolen's friends tendered her a surprise party last Saturday evening. A very pleasant time is reported.

—Rev. J. E. Henderson, of Howard Lake, will occupy the M. E. pulpit in Delano on Sunday evening, July 23. Rev. Davies of this place will take the Howard Lake work for the day.

—Early yesterday morning a former resident of Howard, and a lover of equines, of course, was caught extracting his choice of the three horses that have been pastured in the village park since July 4th. It was a wooden one.

—Some of our young men are, we understand, being fleeced out of their earning every evening by experts at cards. Boys don't do so any more. Take care of your dimes, and put them to a better use.

—The young ladies of the M. E. church met last Thursday afternoon with Miss Etta Parsons and organized a Willing Workers Society. Etta Parsons was elected president, Allie Murphy secretary and Mable Young treasurer.

—John Willcutt has returned home to Lake Hughey, after a long stay in the hospital, in Minneapolis. John has been a sufferer for a long time and his many friends hope the country air will aid in restoring him to health.

—At the City Hall next Tuesday evening, for the benefit of the M. E. church, a good substantial supper will be served for 15 cents; ice cream 10 cents and the entertainment 10 cents, which will consist of the following program:

Tableau	The May Queen.
Solo	Mr. Everson.
Recitation	Miss Emma Wilder.
Song	Miss Wallace, of Duluth.
Recitation	Rev. Mr. Davis, of Buffalo.
Tableau	Golden Stair.
Song	Miss Allie Murphy.
Recitation	Mr. Chas. Hawker.
Instrumental	Mrs. Stewart.
Recitation	Rev. Davis

—Our village was thrown into quite an excitement on Tuesday afternoon by the announcement that Ed. Davis, in a fit of despondency, had swallowed half an ounce of laudanum, with suicidal intent. Medical aid was summoned and although the patient refused to take antidotes, or have the stomach pump used, by means of hypodermatic injections and by keeping the patient in motion, walking him around for about half a day succeeeded in restoring him to his normal condition the effect of the drug having passed off.

—At the Annual School meeting held on Saturday evening at the school house, it was announced that the FREE TEXT books were piled up, all damages received last term having been carefully estimated, and assessed to the scholar using the books! Every scholar will be obliged to pay his or her assessment before he or she can have any books! School will begin in about six weeks, and the children must PAY for the damage done the books bought with district money, and paid for out of school funds not raised for that purpose and in violation of the duty of the treasurer to "pay out all moneys belonging to the district, paying each order only out of the particular fund upon which it was drawn, and shall keep an accurate and detailed and separate account of each fund coming into his hands, in a book or books provided for that purpose" and for which "breach it appears to be the duty of the Board to cause an action to be commenced thereon, in the name of the board of education and the money recovered shall be applied to the use of the district." The law under which school districts are now empowered to furnish books provides that a fund shall be raised for that purpose, and says, "and the said board of trustees or board of education shall have power to purchase the text books selected or contracted for and provide for the loan, free of charge, or sale at at cost, of such text books to the pupils in attendance at such school or schools." "LOAN FREE OF CHARGE." This can't be construed to mean to CHARGE damages. This law was made last winter by the legislature. Hunt up your Law Supplement for 1893. (Most of you who take a paper, printed in this state, have one, or more), and turn to chapter 23, H. F. 592. and read this new law and see for yourselves if the school board has any reason, or law for selling books, at retail prices or collecting damages, or anything else but furnishing them free, or selling them at cost. The school board is elected to obey the laws, not to make them. The legislature is where these laws are make.

—Manilla twine 11½ cents at Jonn Coolen's.

--The weather for the past few weeks has been very favorable for the growing crops and will tend to help out the average some what.

—Buffalo had a fire on Wednesday morning which swept the entire block from Louis Krack's brick store, west, to the court house block. This is a warning to our village authorities to see to it that our fire apparatus is in working order.

--The Eagle, true to her nature, pounced down on the Appleton Watchman, now that it has suspended publication, for ever having sprung into existance. From all accounts the Watchman's few months of existance will compare very favorably with that of the old "Bird that is so fond of dead things." She also intimates that two papers in one town are too many. We had concluded sometime ago that she was growing weary.

—The "man on the school board" rejoices that a year ago this month he negotiated $10,000 at 5 per cent interest, and inquires if it was not lucky that she "renewed her obligations" etc., etc. We are of opinion that a large majority of the people would be prouder had the "sinking fund" been used for paying the bonds than they are to owe $10,000.00 on a school house which after ten years had to be renewed.

—The air gun has been doing considerable damage during the summer but yesterday reached the climax when Amiel Weise fired his off, thinking it was not loaded, and struck little Willie Weldele in the left eye, breaking the front of the eye. Willie was taken to an oculist in St. Paul for treatment, and some hopes of saving the eye are entertained. Perhaps the air-gun fiends will now be a little more careful. On the road to the city it was learned that Morris, Willmar and Litchfield each have a similar case of recent date. Such dangerous weapons should be laid aside.

Delano Annual School Meeting.

On Saturday evening July 15 the Annual School Meeting was held at the school house. At 7:23 President Vorse called the meeting to order and Secretary Maxfield was in position. The president read the call of the meeting, which was called at 6:30 p. m.. The secretary read the report of the Finance committee which after some explanation and the statement of the treasurer that it was all there, and there is now no out standing bonds or orders except a bill of his own and one of McDonald's for $2.50 was accepted and adopted. When the treasurer proceeded to say that there would come out of this for

I. Gutzwiller, Jr., printing and school suplies	$43.90
I. Gutzwiller Jr., treasurer's salary	10.00
L. M. Maxfield, clerk salary	25.00
J. W. McDonald	2.50

It was on motion voted that the treasurer be instructed to establish a sinking fund of $1500, at a rate of interest not less than 5 per cent.

Moved to proceed with the election of two new members one at a time. Joe Lindsley and A. L. Mealey were appointed tellers. Maxfield, Ingerson, and Schaffer were nominated, the two latter declined to run, when on motion the chairman cast the vote for Maxfield who was declared elected.

W. H. Frazee, and T. J. Catlin were nominated for next place. The vote stood as follows: W. H. Frazee, 15; T. J. Catlin, 7; Geo. Schaffer, 1.

W. H. Frazee was declared elected.

It was voted to have nine months school.

I. Gutzwiller desired to take the sense of the meeing on the free text-book question. Superintendent Lindsley advocated the measure in his ablest manner, in several speeches, which were cheered. Squire Billings propounding to him quite a few questions. Prof. Dewey announced that he had carefully assessed damages on the books used last year and the books would not be handed out for use by the scholars until all arrerages were settled for. Chas. S. Hawker made a telling little speech taking the grounds that people pay their taxes and own their share in the books and if compelled to buy the damaged books they will be paying twice. Dr. Catlin remarked that this is a free country and people would have their rights, and the board could do nothing of the kind. They could not deprive children of all their books for a little damage. Someone moved to adjourn which was carried.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

CONUNDRUM: If the McKinley bill can work such wonders in two short years, what would become of the country if it were to run a couple of years longer?

THE grand jury has found indictments against Col. Fred C. Ainsworth. Contractor Geo. Dant, Wm. E. Covert, and Francis Sasse, for the deaths caused by the collapse of Ford's old Theatre in Washington.

IT is well remembered by Delanoites how the Republican orators have, for years, on their grounds informed us of the hard times of '57, and attributed them to the passage of the Democratic Walker tariff bill of '46. How after 11 years it had nearly ruined the country, but they are very slow to admit the evils of to-day are consequents of the McKinley bill.

THE Republican brethren who have been howling about the Democratic administration didn't seem to notice the difference on Monday, July 17, when President Cleveland was out on the Atlantic and Vice-President Stevenson on the broad Pacific, both more than three marine leagues from shore, and, to all intents and purposes out of the United States, and one of the leading candidates of the g. o. p. for years, Secretary Walter Q. Gresham was President. They are bound to howl anyway you fix it. Let 'em howl.

The Country's Unrest.

Not since the great civil conflict that rent our country in twain for a few years and disturbed every village and hamlet in the land has there been such a feeling of unrest as now. For a third of a century, nearly, the age of one generation; the government has been almost wholly in the power of one political party, and never during that time, entirely out of its control. Laws have been enacted in the past few years of which the voters of the nation have, by their votes, shown their disapproval. The party making these laws ha been relegated to the ranks, and other men, with entirely different views concerning the government of a great nation, "a nation of the people, for the people, and by the people" have been given the entire control of the Legislative and Executive brauches of the government. It is expected, and by many hoped that radical changes will be made in the financial and commercial systems. That the people may be more equally dealt with. That class legislation will not appear among our laws. But that wise laws, for the public good, will be enacted; laws giving all men an equal chance, and favoring none, will alone find place on the statutes of the country, Many and various are the reasons to which is attributed this feeling of uneasiness. In different sections of the country, and among different men, of the numerous vocations of life we find causes are given in accord with their knowledge of affairs, gained from their experience in the business world generally, or from reading, often one side only; and from this, exparte evidence, they proceed to render judgment as to the cause of the "hard times" now upon us. We have heard among the causes given "the "John Sherman silver bill" "the McKinley tariff bill," "the importation of pauper laborers," the "Heathen Chinese," the "Substitution of machinery for manual labor, the "restoration of the Democratic party to power," while some say that the "Anarchists will take the country," others fear a religious war," still others attribute to "secrete societies" a large share of the blame. All are anxiously awaiting the appearance of the President's message to the extra session of Congress which he has called to meet on August 7, for the purpose of quieting the nerves of our nation. From previous messages and the well known honesty and ability of the Chief Executive of our country, we have every reason to believe he will, under the guidance of a wise God, not a golden one, advise Congress, in a message to be remembered as one of the grandest solutions of a difficult question ever made, and that a wise Congress will aid him in restoring equinimity where turmoil now reins.

If the Chinese law concerning the failure of banks, "to cut off the Bank President's head when his bank fails" existed in this country, we think there would be fewer banks, and very much fewer failures.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 21, 1893.

Secretary Carlisle is again on duty, having returned from the ten-days vacation which is probably the only one he will get for many long months to come, as the general belief, fully shared by himself, is that he has now entered upon a long period of the hardest work of his life. His department deals exclusively with the two great questions that will occupy the time of Congress—the tariff and finance—and it is his desire to be prepared to furnish all of the information on both subjects that will from time to time be asked for from the time that Congress takes up these questions until it disposes of them, and when that will be a conundrum that no man will try to answer at this time.

Not the slightest bit of a sensation was caused by the alleged news, received here early in the week, of the disabling of the U. S. Mohican by a shot from a poaching sealer flying the Hawaiian flag, for the very simple reason that nobody believed a word of it. The department has had reports from Behrings sea dated a month later than when the alleged disabling took place, which makes no mention whatever of any such incident. That's why nobody believed the story.

The unmber of pensioners absolutely dropped from the roll since March 4, last is 245, but in the same period 5,090 have been suspended, pending farther investigation. Judging from past experience in such cases it is estimated that a large majority of the latter will finally be dropped. The work of examination is being pushed as rapidly as possible and will be confined for a long time to pensions granted under the act of 1890.

Now that Secretary Lamont has taken a four years lease on a Washington residence the rumor-mongers will probably cease starting stories of his intended early retirement from the Cabinet. He will live in good company as his house is next door to Senator Brice and within a stone's throw of the White House. The Secretary came here this week to consult with Secretary Gresham in regard to several matters under the State department which were unsettled when the President left town, and while here he signed the lease for his house. Although accompanied by Mrs. Lamont whose face is almost as well known as his own, the Secretary spent several hours in Washington and got safely away before the newspaper men knew of his visit. However, it would not have made much difference, as Lamont is a past-master in the art of talking without saying anything, which Talleyrand said was the first requirement of diplomacy.

During the short time Secretary Lamont remained in town he found time to decide that Army officers who desire to attend the World's Fair must pay their own fare like other people, and that permissions granted officers to attend the fair do not carry free transportation. While this will upset the plans of numerous Army officers who have been calculating to take in the big show at Uncle Sam's expense its justice is manifested to all. The salary of the Army officers who will visit the fair go right along and they certainly should be willing to pay their own expenses.

Attorney General Olney has been accused of not looking very favorably upon the practical side of poltics, i. e., putting out the opposition and putting in members of his own party, but before leaving Washington for a short vacation he showed that accusation to have been undeserved by notifying a number of the assistants to the Attorney General with salaries ranging from $1,500 to $3,000 that their resignations were desired, and it is stated by those who know that every republican connected with the Department of Justice, outside of the classified service, is to be made to walk the plank.

A good many guesses have been printed about the chairmanships of the important committees of the next House, and one of them was that Representative Bland would not be chairman of the Coinage committee. Now, it can be stated upon excellent authority and without violating anybody's confidence that Mr. Bland will be chairman of that committee in the next House, unless he declines to serve again, and there is no apparent reason why he should do that.

Speaker Crisp is not expected here until about August 5, two days before Congress assembles, and a movement is now on foot to postpone the democratic House caucus for the nomination of officers until the morning of the 7th as it will only require a few minutes to transact its business. The canvas for Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper is going on quietly and all of the candidates are claiming to be safe. There is partically no contest for the other places, Clerk, Postmaster and Chaplain.

CORRESPONDENCE

SOUTH EAST FRANKLIN.

Haying is about completed, the dry weather having helped work along.

A good rain would be very acceptable now.

Miss Mamie Sturman is attending the training school at Buffalo.

J. N. Potter, of Armstrong, preached at the Oakland school house last Sunday.

Dry weather and the chinch bugs are lowering the grades on wheat. If rain does not come soon the crops will be light.

LONG LAKE.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Campbell, of Minneapolis, are visiting relatives here. Mr. C. is a salesman of the North Star Boot and Shoe Co.

Frank and L. A. Lydiard have returned from their visit to Santa Clara, Cal.

A. S. Gardner is still at St. Paul under medical treatment. A few weeks ago his physicians preformed a surgical operation on his throat from the outside, removing therefrom considerable puss and other unnatural formation, from which the patient found considerable relief. It is hoped that speedy recovery may follow.

Dr. and Mrs. Shaw entertained friends from Minneopolis last week. Notwithstanding the healthy condition of our community the Dr. has had several professional calls of late.

Mr. and Mrs. Hedderly, of Minneapolis were visitors at A. H. Lawrence's over Sunday.

BUFFALO BUSINESS.

School teachers are numerous in our city at present. About 90 are in attendance at the training school which is in session this month.

Mrs. W. H. Cutting has been visiting friends in Monticello a few days this week.

Mrs. J. H. Wendell went below last Wednesday and visited a couple of days with Dr. and Mrs. Dean.

Rev. Mr. Starke, of Minneapolis, occupied the M. E. pulpit last Sunday morning.

Mr. O. W. Mapes, and daughter, Miss Etta, of Watertown, Minn., visited Buffalo on Monday.

Mrs. Frank Czeck, living near Montrose, on Tuesday last, had the misfortune to fall from a ladder while working around home and sustained a fracture of the right arm, just above the wrist. She was brought to a Dr. in Buffalo and her injuries cared for on the evening of the same day.

Matt Barnard, brother of the wife of station agent, Bunce, died in Minneapolis last Friday and was brought to Buffalo on Saturday and burried. Rev. H. A. Noyes conducting the funeral services.

About 15 or 18 persons were taken in full connection at the M. E. church last Sabbath morning, after which the anniversary exercises of the church were held and about $150 was pledged for the placing in of a new furnace under the church to take the place of the stoves which take up a great deal of room in the church that might be otherwise occupied.

Born, to Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Donnivan, on Monday last, a boy. All concerned are doing nicely.

Mr H. Wright, of Montrose, brother of our photographer, was visiting the latter and family last Monday.

Irwin Brothers circus exhibited in Buffalo last Monday to a large audience both afternoon and evening. As usual there were a number of gambling outfits along with the show and some of our citizens were minus a great deal more money than they had when they came to town. Why is it that people will always bite at the bait these men throw out for them when they know they always come out behind?

The regular union temperance meeting was held in the Swedish church last Sunday evening and a good program was rendered. Rev. H. A. Noyes delivered a few temperance remarks that had the right ring to them and shows plainly which side of the fence he is on.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Warmth and sunshine are essential to all animal and vegetable life, but the hot tropical weather of last week was most too much for the every day man who gets his living by the sweat of his brow.

Last week farmers got up a fine lot of hay.

Growing crops are doing very well. In some places the chinch bugs are working in the wheat but have not done much damage yet.

There will be a special school meeting in Dist. 102 on August 3d, 1893, at 7 o'clock p. m. to vote on a state loan to obtain money for the building of a school house in said district. Come out everybody, we would like to have the district fully represented in this matter.

It is a fact we are having hard times about the hardest for a generation past, and a good many say the democrats are to blame for it, they brought it on by advocating free trade, etc., and yet under republican high protection, the McKinley bill, the wheels of commerce are being stopped. In the minds of many people there may be a lack of faith in the present administration, and perhaps this may have something to do in helping the hard times along. But there is a good deal of pretense about this no confidence, etc. The moneyed men want to bring on a stringency in the money market, and make the people believe that we must have only gold as a legal standard, but that is the same old Devils lie that was told over 6000 years ago, way back in the garden of Eden. It is for self aggrandisement. At present France is more prosperous than any other nation, and she uses silver freely, has 40 or 50 dollars circulation per capita. The United States has about 20. This country cannot prosper financially without both gold and silver as money, but we will leave this for congress to fix up when they meet August 7th. But it makes a fellow tired to have some of the republican papers all the time howling about the democratic administration. Give them a chance first, then if they can and will not do so, kick them out. Human nature is the same the world over. Everyone is after the coon. We have of late given politics a thorough investigation, and there is only one solution of the whole matter, and that is, you must provide yourself with a reversible political cloak, and at a moments warning, the sound of the political fog horn, you reverse your armor. One side will be protection the other side free trade, one side gold and the other side both gold and silver. The trouble is the American people have become gold worshipers. Same as the children of Isriael way back there in the wilderness when they made that golden calf, and for their wickedness Moses had it ground to powder and strewn upon the waters, and they had to drink of it, and so will it be in the last days so say scripture. But brevity, they say, is the sole mother of wit and I must hasten. But this subject is like a niger camp-meeting, the longer you keep it going the warmer it gets. In closing I will say. I hope the United States will hold together until the present administration can tie a knot strong enough to bind and cement this Republic once and forever, so strong together that no party fiction, discord or party elements, can sever its union.

A LITTLE FELLER.

Say, Sunday's lonesome fur a little feller,
With pop and ma'am a-readin' all the while,
An' never sayin' anything to cheer ye,
An' lookin' 's if they didn' know how to smile;
With hook an' line a-hangin' in the woodshed,
An' lots o' worms down by the outside cellar,
An' Brown's creek just over by the mildam,—
Say, Sunday's lonesome fur a little feller.

Why, Sunday's lonesome fur a little feller
Right on from sun-up when the day commences;
Fur little fellers don't have much to think of,
'Cept chasin' gophers 'long the cornfield fences,
Or diggin' after moles down in the wood-lot,
Or climbin' after apples what's got meller,
Or fishin' down in Brown's creek an' mill-pond,—
Say, Sunday's lonesome fur a little feller.

But Sunday's never lonesome fur a little feller
When he is stayin' down to Uncle Ora's;
He took his book onct right out in the orchard,
An' told us little chaps just lots o' stories;
All truly-true, that happened onct fur honest,
An' one 'bout lions in a sort o' cellar,
An' how some angels came an' shut their mouths up
An' how they never teched that Dan'el fellfeller.

An' Sunday's pleasant down to Aunt Marilda's;
She lets us take some books that some one g'in her
An' takes us down to Sunday school t' the school house;
An sometimes she has nice shortcake fur dinner.
An' onct she had a puddin' full o' raisins
An' onct a frosted cake all white an' yeller;
I think, when I stay down to Aunt Marilda's,
That Sundays pleasant fur a little feller.

THE financial uneasiness has gone north. Icebergs have been making a run on the banks of Newfoundland.

A SHOWER of one million toads is reported from Grand Falls, Me. Those Yankees are always exact, even at the risk of spoiling a good story.

BRUSSELS and Antwerp are both to have international exhibitions in 1895, and expect to be connected by electric trains running 110 miles an hour. These cities are 25 miles apart.

SMOKING compartments for ladies have been provided on Russian trains, and hereafter men who object to tobacco smoke will be able to travel in comfort through the czar's dominions.

IT is said that a Columbian guard undertook to close up the nursery in the Children's building at the world's fair on the ground that the people couldn't hear the band playing Vogner's "Der Meisterboilerfactorie."

WOMEN average no higher than men in a general round-up of all the virtues, but, as the New York Recorder says, they're so strong where the men are weak that the men think 'em angels. And so they are, bless 'em!

WILLIAM STEINWAY, of New York, has been decorated by the emperor of Germany with the star of the Order of the Red Eagle (third-class), carrying with it the rank of knighthood. As Mr. Steinway is only a third-class knight, his friends will continue to call him "Bill."

A PRIZE parrot was recently bought by Archduchess Stephanie, of Austria, for $400. An evidence of its ability as a linguist was given when she heard it recite the Lord's Prayer in six different languages. The man of whom she bought it was a ventriloquist, who had taught the bird to open its mouth, while he did the talking.

THE electric light is generally believed to generate but little heat, but M. Voille, a noted French physicist, having made a large number of experiments to determine the temperature of the voltaic arc of street lamps, finds the hottest part of the positive carbon to be 3,500 degrees centigrade, which is hot enough for all practical purposes.

THE British battleship Victoria, which went down in the Mediterranean recently, was the most costly vessel in the British navy. The expenditure in its construction was $5,784,585, and her armament added about $1,000,000 more. The greatest outlay for a United States vessel, exclusive of armament, has been about $3,200,000. Great Britain pays a big price for leading the navies of the world.

STATISTICS show that in the older states of the union the females predominate, the percentage in Massachusetts being 51.42; in Rhode Island, 51.37; Connecticut, 50.48; Montana, 33.50; Wyoming, 35.19; Nevada, 31.16, and Washington, 37.73. In all countries there are born more boys than girls, in the proportion of about 105 boys to 100 girls, but the boys die much faster than the girls in the earlier years of life.

AN ingenious automatic switch is now applied to the electric lamps in the guests' room in a hotel, whereby the locking of the room door from the outside (but not from the inside) turns off the lights. Many travelers, it seems, doubtless with the philanthropic idea of helping the business of the local electric-lighting company, are accustomed to leave the lamps burning at full head when they vacate their rooms.

PAPER stockings are a new German invention. A Berlin shoe trade journal says that the stockings are made of a specially-prepared impregnated paper stock, which, it is claimed, has an extraordinary effect on perspiring feet. The moisture is absorbed by the paper as rapidly as it is formed and the feet remain dry and warm, while the constant temperature maintained in the shoes is said to be a great preventive of colds.

EPHRAIM W. BULL, the originator of the Concord grape, is still living at Concord, Mass. He is 87 years old, and one of the prominent men of the historic town. He was a friend of Emerson and Alcott, and has been greatly honored by distinguished visitors to Concord and by horticulturists at home and abroad. In his garden in Concord he still shows the old mother vine of the Concord grape, which he developed from the seeds of a native wild grape planted just fifty years ago.

THE Cleveland Leader says that electricity promises to revolutionize the art of brickmaking by greatly reducing the amount of labor required. Instead of laboriously building a kiln, all that is necessary is to fit the clay into a set of iron molds with covers that contain one thousand bricks each. The covers are fastened on, the current applied and the work of burning is done in a very short time. The covers detach themselves automatically, and the brick is ready to be tumbled on the stock for sale. At this rate electricity promises soon to be the greatest servant of mankind.

THE ballot for a national flower has been opened in the Woman's building at the world's fair and great interest is manifested in this method of obtaining the expression of the public upon so important a matter. The Indian corn, the flower known as the cosmos, as well as the pansy and sunflower are becoming rivals for favoritism. Iowa women vote for corn, Arkansas ladies vote for the passion flower, Kansas favors the sunflower, California her poppy and Nebraska the goldenrod. Whether any one flower will receive sufficient support to consider it a popular choice is a question.

THE fact is shown in the emigration and immigration returns of Great Britain and Ireland for last year that while the native population is leaving in hundreds of thousands for this country and the British colonies, there is a considerable influx of immigrants into the United Kingdom. Last year 210,042 British and Irish left their homes, the great majority, 150,039, coming to the United States. In the same period 22,137 aliens, from the continent of Europe, arrived in the United Kingdom. Many aliens pass through England en route to America, but the 22,137 took up their permanent home in that country.

PROSPECTS BRIGHT.

The Financial Situation as Reviewed at the Treasury Departments — National Banks Make an Excellent Showing—Some Failures Reported.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—As viewed at the treasury department, the week begins with brighter financial prospects. A number of the recently failed banks are taking the necessary steps to resume, and Comptroller Eckels is lending them all the aid possible. He was notified during morning that the failed First national bank, of Kendallville, Ind., and the failed Northern national bank, of Big Rapids, Mich., would probably resume this week. The First national bank, of Santa Anna, Cal., which resumed business on Saturday after a short suspension, received in deposits $12,000 while the withdrawals amounted to only $6,000. This is regarded as an evidence that confidence is being practically restored on the Pacific coast.

Comptroller Eckles says a sufficient number of national bank requests have been received under his last call to form a basis of estimate of the general condition. He says the showing is excellent; that the condition is as good and in many places better than ever before. A general increase of reserves of from 1 to 3 per cent. is shown. Mr. Eckels says these reports demonstrate that the banks properly conducted are upon a sound basis and that the failures are only of weak banks. It is proof, he adds, that the system is being purged of banks badly conducted—those that are run as aids to other schemes.

MILWAUKEE, July 25.—There was not much excitement at the banks here Monday, and there is a feeling that there will be no more big runs unless something unusual should happen. During the morning the Merchants' exchange bank paid off a large number of depositors and there was quite a little gathering in the Mitchell bank. The crowds melted before noon, however, and during the afternoon there were few people in any of the banks except regular customers doing their usual business. There is said to be a strong probability that the Milwaukee national bank, which closed Saturday, will resume business shortly.

CONNERSVILLE, Ind., July 25.—The Citizens' bank, owned by ex-United States Treasurer Huston, closed its doors Monday morning. The liabilities are $150,000. Mr. Huston posted a notice that all claims would be paid in full and that his entire estate would be held for the benefit of depositors. The total assets will amount to half a million dollars. Mr. Huston offered Indianapolis parties $100,000 collateral securities for the loan of $15,000 a short time ago, but was refused. The other banks did not encounter "runs," and everything indicates that people are confident that Mr. Huston will soon resume.

MEDFORD, Wis., July 25.—The Taylor county bank has failed and Cashier Matt has fled. It was the depository for the county and city funds. Hermann Matt, the cashier, was the county clerk and school treasurer, while Theodore Hartman, the president, is mayor. The bank is stocked for $9,000, owned by Hartman & Matt. The assets are given at $16,000. As near as can be estimated the county funds on deposit amount to $6,000, while of the city money there is about $4,500. Mr. Hartman says he will turn over all the property he has to save the creditors of the bank from loss.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—Since the 1st of January nearly 200 national banks have closed their doors, against less than fifty during the same period last year. Of the failures this year five nave been United States depositories, as follows: The First national bank, of Little Rock, Ark.; the Gate City National bank, of Atlanta, Ga.; the People's national bank, of Denver, Col.; the German national bank, of Denver, Col., and the Kentucky national bank, of Louisville, Ky.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., July 25.—The extensive manufacturing firm of Bradley & Co. went into a receivership Monday afternoon. Judge Vann appointed John Dunn, Jr., receiver. The firm manufactured triphammers, wagons and fancy carriages and filters. The building and plant are valued at $500,000. The liabilities are about $350,000. The judge issued an order allowing the receiver to continue the manufacture and the sale of the stock on hand.

CHICAGO, July 25.—The firm of Parkhurst & Wilkinson, iron merchants at 148 to 164 Kinzie street, failed on Monday. The firm's assets are estimated at $1,000,000. Parkhurst & Wilkinson were among the leading merchants in their line in the United States and had been established for more than a decade. Slow collections due at the bank is the cause of their trouble.

BALTIMORE, Md., July 25.—The Southern Electric company, one of the big enterprises of this city, made a voluntary assignment Monday to Morrill N. Packard. Failure to collect overdue accounts made it impossible for the company to meet its obligations. The assets of the concern are estimated at $175,000; liabilities, $100,000. Mr. Packard filed a bond for $300,000.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., July 25.—The Louisville national bank suspended payment Monday afternoon. The bank has a capital stock of $400,000. The announcement that the bank had closed for business was not unexpected. The bank found that it was impossible to realize on the assets owing to the financial stringency. Deposits received during the day will be returned.

LOWEST PRICE YET.

The Government Makes Silver Purchases at 69.6.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—Acting Director of the Mint Preston purchased 407,500 ounces of silver Monday at 69.6. This is the lowest price yet paid for silver in the history of the government purchases. There were seven bidders offering in the aggregate 286,000 ounces at from 69.7 to 70.5. The offers were declined by the acting director of the mint and counter propositions of 69.6 made. Two of the bidders accepted the government's offer and let go 40,000 ounces more at the same figure.

Work Resumed.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., July 25.—The extensive iron and steel plant of Jones & Laughlin has resumed in all departments, after an idleness of several weeks. The steel, iron and finishers' scales of the Amalgamated association were all signed. In the case of six finishers all have returned to work except President Carey of the finishers' union, who resigned because his union was not recognized. The resumption gives employment to 5,000 men. The situation at the other mills is unchanged and there is no immediate prospect of settlement.

FRANCE WANTS WAR.

She Notifies the Powers of Her Intention to Blockade the Ports of Siam—Her Minister Leaves Bangkok—The Feeling in England.

BANGKOK, July 25.—M. Pavie, French minister resident, has lowered the flag over his office and has notified the Siamese government that he will leave the city to go aboard the French warship Inconstante on Wednesday. He has requested the government to provide pilots to conduct the Lutin and Comete down the river. French subjects in Bangkok will be placed under the protection of the Dutch consul.

PARIS, July 25.—The government has notified the powers that it intended to establish a blockade of the Siamese coast, without prejudice to the other measures that may be taken with the object of securing to France the guarantees to which she is entitled.

The Liberte newspaper says that France will watch and hold Battambang and Angkora as guarantees that her demands will be satisfied.

The Temps says that the beginning of the blockade will be deferred until Thursday or Friday to enable France to take steps prescribed by international law.

Besides the blockade military operations will be opened shortly. The details of these operations are still undetermined. They will be settled at a cabinet council within a day or two. Steps will be taken in Indo-China toward serious action immediately after the arrival of the battalion of the foreign legion. The second portion of this battalion has sailed from Marseilles. The native militia will be reorganized, and together with the imported companies of the foreign legion will cooperate with the force already in active service in the Khong district.

PARIS, July 25.—The Liberte says that the French gunboats probably will go down the river, shell and destroy the Paknam forts and then return to their positions before Bangkok and bombard the palace. Some painful measure is necessary, adds this journal, for the preservation of France's prestige.

The Debats says that Siam, as a rice producing country, probably does not fear greatly the blockade. As for the operations on land the Debats thinks the Siamese will be provided surreptitiously by England with all the arms they need.

The majority of the Paris newspapers devote as much space to denunciation of England as to the matter at issue between France and Siam. England is reproached by them with supporting the Siamese in their opposition to France's just demands, and with planning to give the Siamese secret aid when hostilities begin.

The Siamese minister in this city has not yet received his passport from the French government. Immediately after M. Pavie's departure from Bangkok, however, he will go to Lisbon or Madrid, as he is accredited to Spain and Portugal as well as to France. The minister still hopes for peaceable settlement of the trouble. The Siamese secretary of the legation said that no further news had been received at the legation from Bangkok. Upon seeing M. Pavie embark, he added, the Siamese government might decide to accept the terms of the ultimatum. This supposition, however, was merely personal and did not rest on any definite information.

LONDON, July 25.—The Bangkok correspondent to the Times says:

"The territory that Siam offers to sacrifice covers the extreme point of recently attempted French aggression. The cession involves the evacuation of the Siamese ports of Poowadone Altopen and Sumpang. On the river itself the French have been unable in four months to place a single station except Khnong, and that was obtained by a surprise."

LONDON, July 25. — The Franco-Siamese complications have been the one absorbing topic in the lobbies of the house of commons. The situation is regarded with apprehension by all parties, and the last news from Bangkok and Paris is read with as much anxiety as eagerness. On all sides regret is expressed that the British warships in Siamese waters were not reenforced a month ago, as the British interests in Siam outnumbered the French a hundred to one.

LONDON, July 25.—The Times publishes an editorial which, it is thought, expresses the general English opinion of the merits of the Franco-Siamese dispute. In commenting upon Siam's answer to the French ultimatum, the Times says:

"Siam's refusal to go beyond just and reasonable limits or to concede territory to which France never put in an effective claim until the other day, is no excuse for a measure of hostility, ostensibly directed against the Siamese, but really striking at the commerce of England and other countries having commercial relation with Siam."

IN GREAT NEED.

Portions of Kansas Overrun by Penniless Workmen from Colorado.

TOPEKA, Kan., July 25. — Western Kansas is overrun with men who are making their way east from Colorado, where they have been thrown out of employment by closing of the mines and smelters. A. Gluck, mayor of Dodge City has issued a proclamation calling upon citizens to make provisions for the army of idle men that is passing through that town. He asserts that the majority of them are deserving of assistance and willing to work. He appeals to charitable persons to raise a fund to provide for their immediate wants to prevent them from breaking into houses to obtain the necessaries of life.

Dant, the contractor employed to make the excavation for the electric light plant; William E. Covert, superintendent, and Francis Sasse, engineer of the building, holding them responsible for the old Ford's theater disaster of June 9 last in which twenty-three persons lost their lives and a large number was injured.

Ravages of Cholera.

LONDON, July 25.—The details of the ravages of cholera in Mecca are even more terrible than the stories from Russia last year. Dr. Chaffy, the Egyptian delegate to the sanitary council in Alexandria, reports the number of deaths to be more than twice the official figures. There were 135,000 pilgrims in Mecca when the cholera broke out and at least 10 per cent. died, besides a large proportion of the native population of 60,000. He adds that at Mouna it has been impossible to bury the dead who were piled up.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Blown to Pieces.

Gust Olson was blown to pieces, very small pieces, in Minneapolis by dynamite. It occurred about 6 o'clock in the morning. He had charge of the blasting for the new sewer and entered the dynamite shanty at the hour named to prepare the cartridges for the day's work. J. W. Kelly, the night watchman in charge of the works, had not yet left his place in the engine house, which stood about a block away, and he saw Olson enter the magazine. He says that Olson had been there not over five minutes when an explosion that shook the locality for blocks around took place. That is all that is known of the accident.

There is not a splinter left of the shanty, and Olson's body was blown into fragments. The largest piece of the remains found was the left thigh. This was blown across the vacant lot, over a barn at 419 Fifth street. There it took a downward curve, and with such terrific force was it carried through the air that it struck a picket fence in the rear of 419 and broke a 2x4 joist square off. It tore a number of pickets away and was picked up near the front door step of Geo. Coburn's house, 427 Adams street. Portions of the remains were found scattered about within a radius of four blocks from the place where the accident occurred.

The head was found on Monroe street. It fell in the street in front of a woman and so horrified was she at the sight that she fainted.

Olson was about 52 years of age and was an old and tried hand with explosives. The greatest mystery surrounds the accident and there is not the slightest fact known that can explain it.

A Ghastly Find.

Several boys while digging in the side of an embankment in St. Paul discovered a human body. When fully excavated it proved to be that of a boy 12 or 13 years old, clad in winter garments. The body was in a sitting position and the hands were folded across the lap. Investigation resulted in establishing the fact that the body was that of Charles Langford, who mysteriously disappeared Nov. 1 last. On the day the boy was missed from his home he was seen to be going to the embankment, in which he had a penchant for digging caves. It is suggested that he had dug into the side of the cut and was still sitting in the excavation when the earth above suddenly gave away, burying the unfortunate boy alive.

A Deliberate Suicide.

A patient at the insane asylum at St. Peter, named Joseph Sooka, while out walking with a number of others in charge of an attendant, got away unobserved and deliberately committed suicide by walking into the river near the hospital. His absence was not discovered until the rest had returned to the hospital. Diligent search was made, but he could not be found. A man working on the pontoon bridge had seen some one walk into the river, but had not seen him come out. The body of the demented victim was found by a boy who was fishing in the river about a mile from where he was seen entering the water.

Caught.

During the past year thousands of dollars worth of property have been stolen from box cars in Wabasha and despite close watch the thieves have always escaped detection. One night recently $750 worth of clothing were taken. The property was traced to the residence of Otto Burkhardt and a close watch kept. The watchers caught Burkhardt, Fred Trichter, August Sanger and Henry Smith, all residents of Read's Landing, removing the stolen goods. They were arrested, and with them a stranger, who is thought to be the man who disposed of the stolen goods.

COULDN'T FEAZE THE FAKIR.

The Tables Turned on a Disappointed Purchaser by a Street Peddler.

The fakir had a lot of German silver rings spread out on a little table just across the street from the depot, and was declaring in a loud voice that he would warrant each one to cure rheumatism if worn on the finger for a month, when a stout-backed and determined-looking man walked up to him and said:

"You were at Cartersville about a month ago?"

"Yes, sir, and I'm going back there again next week. The people at Cartersville are crying for my rings. Who wants the next? Five different sizes and all warranted to afford permanent relief to the wearers."

"I bought this 'ere ring of you down at Cartersville," continued the man with a gleam of danger in his eye.

"Not the slightest doubt of it, my dear sir, and I am glad to know that it has done you a power of good. Gentlemen, this is the last chance you may ever have to get one of these electro-magnetic antirheumatic rings. Every one guaranteed as represented or money refunded. Relieves rheumatism in five minutes and works a complete cure in four weeks."

"You are a dog-goned liar!" shouted the stout-backed man as he peeled off his coat.

"Gentlemen of Baldwin county, fellow citizens of these United States, please surround us!" shouted the fakir. "Here's a man who bought a ring of me a month ago. It was a guaranteed ring, but something is wrong with it. Instead of saying so, however, he calls me a liar—not a plain liar, but a dog-goned liar."

"So you are—a liar and a fraud!"

"Gentlemen of Baldwin county, come closer. My honor is at stake. My first impulse is to annihilate this man, but I never act on impulse. I know that he is in error. I know that I can convince him of the fact. Later on he will beg my pardon for his rudeness. Now, then, tell this crowd what's the matter with the ring."

"It hasn't helped my rheumatism the least bit!"

"Have you worn it steadily?

"I have!"

"And on your honor you have not been benefited?"

"Not a spark!"

"Let me see it. Ha! Gentlemen of Baldwin county, here is the keynote to the mystery. Our firm manufacturers three different sorts of these rings. There are the rheumatic ring, the consumption ring and the catarrh ring. By accident a consumption ring got mixed up with the rheumatic rings and was sold to this man without my detecting it. No wonder it has not helped his rheumatism! It wasn't made to. It has caused his case of consumption, however, as you can all see by his looks, and he ought to be grateful for that. Look at him, fellow-citizens—a man positively cured of that dread disease, consumption, kicking because it does not also cure the rheumatics at the same time and for the trifling matter of fifty cents!"

The crowd began to murmur and the stout-backed man to go down into his boots, and the fakir capped the climax by shouting:

"But human nature is ever thus! I expect to meet one such man in every crowd. Here, sir—here is a catarrh ring and here is a rheumatic ring—both free gifts to you. Wear them and be cured. Be cured of three awful human ailments for the small sum of half a dollar, and then come back and kick because our firm hasn't begun the manufacture of an electric ring to knock out fever and ague and straighten a pair of bowlegs and grow hair on a bald head at the same time.—Wilmington (Del.) MONA.

By T. PEATHER.

COLD and dark night, windy and wet. All those who had warm clothes were shivering therein as they hurried off to their firesides. Even they felt the need of warmth; how much more those who had no such comforts to look forward to! A few, a very few, lingered awhile, studying what they might purchase for their families in order that, once at home, they should no more that night require to turn out into the damp and unpleasant streets.

Of those who were hurrying the most to reach their dwellings was a handsome man of about twenty-nine years of age, who looked as if he were somewhat tired of existence in this world, although it appeared to have dealt very kindly with him. He seemed in the most robust health, and from his dress it might be thought that he never knew what it was to want a single thing on which he had set his heart.

He was clad in a warm fur overcoat, through which it was impossible for either the keen, cutting wind which blew along the street or the heavy rain which fell to make the slightest impression. Its thick folds kept out both wind and rain, and neither the one nor the other affected him in the smallest degree. Notwithstanding this, Hubert McLean traveled rapidly along the pavement. He did this not because he was afraid of being wet or because of the warm reception he would meet when once he reached his dwelling.

Hubert MacLean was one of the most promising, indeed we might say the most promising, painter of his day. More in request than any two of his compeers he bade fair to outshine even the most brilliant of the present members of the Royal academy. Handsome and fascinating, it was a wonder to his friends that he had not been made a happy Benedict years ago. He was flattered and caressed by society, which always does flatter those who are successful, whilst those who are merely clever may go their own way in the world without it taking the least notice of them beyond spurning their advances. But few, if any, guessed what had effectually prevented him from falling a prey to the machinations of match-making mothers and fascinating daughters.

It was only the day before that he arrived in London from a long tour in the colonies, where he had been seeking inspiration for his work, and he was hurrying along to his hotel when he suddenly stopped to look at and speak to a very beautiful but meanly-clad child on the footpath.

She had in her hands a small bouquet of flowers. He bought the bouquet, and no sooner had he done so than the little child made off, after thanking him in a curiously sweet voice, toward her own home. Something in that voice seemed to strike MacLean, for he glanced at her and half made up his mind to follow her.

She made off as rapidly as she was able to, and she had very nearly got out of sight among the crowd when the young man did ultimately make up his mind to follow her. As she made her way along the footpath she glanced longingly into the windows which were now covered over with steam from the heated and steaming edibles on view therein.

Still on she went, followed now by the painter. Not far had they gone ere they turned down a road at the end of which was a large block of houses, which it was evident were occupied by very poor people indeed—people who never knew where their next meal was to come from.

The child paused at the bottom of the stairs of one of these houses and then turned as if she had forgotten something or other. A moment she stood considering, and then she made off again to a little shop at the corner of the street. She entered and purchased a small loaf, one which appeared to be about large enough to serve a baby of two years old for a half meal, or which a healthy girl of the size of the child might eat at a mouthful. She paid her penny for it, one she had drawn out of her dress, and then tripped off, almost as lightly as if she had been able to spend a guinea on a meal, back again to her home.

MacLean followed her, and this time she did not quite reach the step of the door leading to the house where she had stopped previously, when she paused, and giving a startled cry dropped the loaf she had in her hand, and knelt down near something which lay at the roadside. One glance was sufficient for her to see what it was. As soon as she saw it she cried out in low wailing tones: "Oh, mother, mother." The young painter, ever ready to help a fellow mortal in distress, went up to the little mite, and found her on the ground beside a woman's form. Quite unconscious there she lay. A lovely woman she had evidently been, and still lovely she might be but for the pale, haggard look which had settled down upon her features. That look was not accounted for solely by the dead faint into which she had fallen. From the swoon she would, no doubt quickly recover, but she was suffering from a disease from which so many die that it might, with advantage, perhaps, be included in those most fatal of all diseases—those which can be cured, but which are not for lack of means.

He took the woman in his arms, and telling the little child to lead the way he ascended the stairs of the huge and comfortless house where the two resided up to the garret, and there entered a room which told a tale in the most pitiful language. It was a tale which would make the sympathetic heart well-nigh break with its pathos. It was a tale of the deepest poverty and want. On the few rags which served for a bed he laid the inanimate form he held in his arms. His heart was sore within him as he beheld the sight around him, and sending the child for some food and coal he set about his task of restoring to life the unfortunate being he held in his arms. The process was a long and tedious one, and it was some time before he could restore animation. Ultimately he succeeded, and he found a pair of eyes which seemed familiar to him glancing vacantly up at him. Slowly they appeared to begin to understand what was going on about. Then, all at once as it seemed, the woman gave a little gasp, and started up from her rough couch with a cry.

"Hubert!" she whispered.

The artist glanced quickly at her. He had been too much occupied before to pay too close attention to her features, though they had appeared familiar to him. Now he was in turn startled. He breathed a name, the name of a woman he had loved years ago—Mona. Now he knew why he had been so struck by the child's looks. She was the child of the darling of his heart, of her whom he had not seen since that dark and dreary day, eight years before, when he had seen her married to another after promising to love only him.

In those early days Hubert had been a great sufferer. Then he was a poor struggler unknown to fame. He had already done some clever things but nobody knew about them. Now all was different. Then he could scarcely make an existence at all; now he had more than enough to suffice for all his not very extravagant, though cultured, tastes. Then, however, love was his and he was content to wait; now he had lived for years without love, but as love left him, fortune, that fickle jade, smiled upon him.

What if it did? He cared not. It was all as dross. He had lost all interest in the world; life was to him, if not exactly a miserable existence, yet a thankless one. Love had now vanished and with it all that makes life valuable.

Then he loved, but his fair one had proved false. A suitor with less merit, but more wealth, had come forward and his qualifications had proved too strong to be withstood. His betrothed married his rival with scarcely a struggle—at least, so he thought.

Henceforth all was dark and gloomy. He struggled on because he could not help himself. The only solace that remained to him was hard work, and like many another discarded lover he sought to kill his love and to wipe her image from his heart by hard toil. At last he felt he had almost succeeded when he met her again in such a condition as this. His heart awoke again at the sound of her voice; it thrilled him through and through.

"Hubert, forgive me," it cried. The words came to him as an appeal from the dead. Mona, once his, had been dead to him now for so long.

"My love, I do forgive you," he cried. His love, for so long driven underneath, welled up again with increased strength, and he would have clasped her in his arms—those arms in which he would have given anything to have shielded her. But a thought still haunted him.

"Your husband?" he asked.

"He is dead," she replied. "He died long ago."

"I might have known," he said, "you would not have been in this state if he had lived. How it comes that you are here now, even, I cannot imagine. You had money of your own, darling, had you not?"

"Father failed and the shock killed him. My husband at this became very angry with me and turned me out of doors. I might have starved for all he cared, and I very nearly did. I could not find a home anywhere. I had no money and my mother, who had been the sole cause of me marrying the man I loathed and detested from the very bottom of my heart, was also penniless. We made our home together for some time, but she could not stand the privations we were obliged to go through and she died, too. Then I had nothing but my little Mona. I sold all my jewelry, but I had not enough to support me. We gradually sank lower and lower, until we came to live here. I obtained some sewing, but I was badly paid, and I could scarce keep the wolf from the door."

"But your husband; you could have compelled him to support you."

"I would have died first. I almost did, but God has given me a love for my little one which has preserved me through all. How I have lived I do not know. All I can say is that I have. Forgive me, Hubert, I have been severely punished."

"My darling!" It was enough; she knew that she had no more to fear.

In a few days a special license was obtained, and the two were wedded, never more to part. After the honeymoon the fashionable world was astonished to find that a lovely dwelling in Surry had been fitted up for the popular artist and his wife, who were spoken of as "the handsome Mr. and Mrs. MacLean." There was one thing they did not learn, and that was how Hubert found his wife.

The loving couple cared little for the world, and went on their way rejoicing and happy in each other's love. They tread life's pathway in a thankful spirit to the Great Father for all His gifts to them.

A Biblical Phrase.

In many of the grandest of Scriptural phrases there is not a little suggestion of the simplicity of childhood, and on the other hand it not infrequently happens that some childish speech reminds one of the utterances of the prophets of old.

An instance of this was given not long ago by a lad of five or six summers. He had probably never heard the Biblical sentence wherein it is said of Jehovah that "He bowed the heavens and came down;" but it was in much the same spirit that he asked his father:

"Papa, why doesn't the sky bend down when God stands up?"

The chief difference was that between conscious and unconscious imagery.—Youth's Companion.

It is expected that this fountain will be a great assistance to the poor, and, if successful, others will be built.

It withers all the plants on its banks as well as the roots of trees, which it dyes of the same hue as its water. No fish live in its stream.

—There is no doubt that South Africa is regarded at present as the most promising field for development in the production of the precious metals. The continued extension of mining operations in the Transvaal, and the more recent rediscovery of the ancient goldfields of Mashonaland and the Matabele country, seem to be drawing miners and mining-engineers from other countries in considerable numbers, and the movement is likely to continue for some time to come.—Engineering and Mining Journal.

The dog seems to have no comprehension of the meaning of the words he utters, but he readily repeats anything that is said to him in a shrill, boyish-sounding voice. Some days he seems to lose the faculty or to be disinclined to exercise it, but on others delights to say anything he is told.

—Gen. Dodds says in his report on the Dahomey campaign that the Lebel rifle gave entire satisfaction. The cartridges were in no way affected by the voyage out or by the climate of Dahomey. Smokeless powder and the old kind were used in the way of experiment in several engagements. The smokeless powder proved by far the more satisfactory. The old powder drew the fire of the enemy instead of masking the detachment using it, and the troops using the smokeless powder suffered much less than the others.

RAMADAN AND BAIRAM.

The Mahometan Month of Day Fasting and Night Feasting.

Ramadan is the Mahometan Lent. At this time the sultan always goes from the Gildiz palace in Pera across the great bridge of boats into his Turkish capital, Stamboul, to kiss the mantle of Mahomet. Ramadan is in the ninth lunar month of the Mahometan year, and during it the people are required both by the law and the prophet to spend their days in fasting and prayer. From sunrise to sunset not a morsel of food and not a drop of liquid must pass their lips; and the more conscientious of the people consider it a sin to swallow their saliva during this time. They must not smoke or take snuff, or use any means to stay their appetite, and even the use of perfumery is forbidden. The Mahometan who is a perpetual smoker misses his tobacco more than his food during the fasting, and even the poorest of the day laborers, who, faint from working twelve hours on an empty stomach, having their dinner ready for them, watch the sun going with a cigarette in their hands, and will consume this before they begin to eat. The olive is considered to be five times more blessed than the water to break the fast with, and the dinner which follows the fast of Ramadan is always the best that the purse of the faster can procure.

Ramadan is to all Mahometan countries a month of day fasting and night feasting. The people make up for their abstinence during the day by a grand carouse at night, and Stamboul during this period holds a nightly carnival. All the restaurants and cafes are lighted and the streets filled with revelers, who are making up for their privations during the day. The wealthy sit up all night, receiving and returning calls and giving dinner parties, and after the evening services at the Mosque, the people go to the esplanade of the Suli-Manich, the fashionable drive, where there is a dense crowd of promenaders. The bazars are illuminated and the lemonade peddler and the sweetmeat men are out in all their glory. The season which the great fast of Ramadan, and which might correspond to Easter is called Bairam. This is a time of feasting and rejoicing that the months of fasting are over.—Cosmopolitan.

WILL AND HEREDITY.

Strengthening and Reinforcing the Good Qualities of Children.

In the ordinary case, the qualities transmitted from parents to children must necessarily make a whole inferior to the mental and moral equipment of the better one of the parents, unless there is a remarkable after-development of them. This is true, because the inheritance from the inferior parent lowers that from the superior. Consequently, it is evident that men would retrograde, instead of advancing, in civilization unless forces stronger than heredity were in operation. Such forces are environment and will. In an individual case either one may be as strong or stronger than hereditary, but, with the average of those who improve upon the mental or moral condition of their parents, the case is that only the combined influence of environment and will is more active than heredity.

Heredity is the first of the three factors to operate. It is, so to say, in full blast before the child is responsible. Except in extraordinary intances, most of the hereditary qualities of children may be anticipated, certainly discovered, by observing parents who wish to do the best possible in the long run for their children rather than to gain immediate pride. Parents should realize that children merit neither praise nor blame for hereditary qualities, inasmuch as both good and bad qualities come without effort on the part of the children. They should particularly realize that only effort, in its various forms of obedience, industry, regularity, cheerfulness, etc., is the true test of a child's merit. A parent, next to maintaining a child's health, should cultivate his will to cheerful obedience and industry. These are the qualities which it is first possible for a child to acquire; and acquired qualities are those which bring the most training and are the most praiseworthy.

That parent loves well, but not wisely, and is doing wrong, who gives unearned rewards to the idle and selfish boy or the fretting girl. If the boy fails to prove half-spoiled on becoming a man, it is in spite of his early training. The chances are that he will be willful, besides idle and selfish. But an early environment of industry, obedience, thought and faithful religious training can train the will in such a way as to modify natural bad qualities and reinforce natural good qualities and lead to the acquiring of new good ones.—N. Y. Ledger.

CORN, TOBACCO AND BEANS.

Curious Legend Related by the Old-Time Indians of Iowa.

Among the many curious myths and traditions of the Saukee and Musquakee Indians of Iowa none are more singular than the combination legend which relates the story of the origin of corn, tobacco and beans. The story, as told Col. Davenport (the founder of the city of the same name) by the head chief of the allied tribes, is as follows: In a time many moons past the Indian ate only meat and roots. Two mighty hunters were one day sitting by a fire on the great prairie roasting their meat (vension), when they were greatly astonished to see a beautiful squaw descend from a many-tinted evening cloud, which was hanging over the west, and alight upon the smooth sward near by. The first idea that struck the hunters was that she was one of their ancestors who had taken upon herself the task of acting as guardian angel, and that if she had made the trip from the "happy hunting grounds," as they verily believed she had, she must be hungry, tired and cold. She did not attempt to approach the fire, however, and said nothing until she had been approached by one of the hunters, who proffered her a good-sized slice of the steaming venison. Before accepting the food she sat down upon the ground without moving her feet from the spot where they had first come in contact with the earth. While in the act of seating herself the hunter noticed that both hands fell helplessly at her sides, making great indentations in the soft earth. As soon as she recovered from what appeared to be a fainting fit, resulting from overfatigue, she most graciously accepted the food, ate of it, and almost immediately started upon her return trip to the cloud—not, however, until she had promised to reward the hunters for their kindness. Preparatory to her leave-taking she informed her generous friends that if they would return to that very spot in one year they would find their reward in waiting. Upon returning to camp the hunters related the story of their wonderful adventure with "the Lady of the Clouds," and that told of the promised reward—all of which was accepted with taunts and jeers. During the following year they were laughed at so often whenever reference was made to the "reward" or "the Woman of the Clouds," they were all but deterred from making a journey in search of a fulfillment of the promise. Finally, in order not to be subjects of ridicule for the whole village, they pretended to make a hunting excursion in another direction, and then made a detour by way of the spot where they had met the vision of the skies. A wonderful surprise was in waiting. The spot where the specter had sat while eating the roast venison was overgrowned with tobacco; where her right hand had rested when it fell seemingly helpless to the ground corn had sprung up in all profusion, and in the indentation made by the left hand upon the same occasion beans had grown and were then hanging in a multitude of brown and golden clusters. Where the feet of "the Woman of the Clouds" first touched when she alighted before the astonished hunters a year previon two springs of water were gushing forth—one, cold and sparkling, watered the Indian Eden; the other, which flowed in an opposite to the first, was of a turbid character, but sufficiently hot to cook corn and beans. It is needless to add that the two hunters had a thanksgiving then and there and that there was great joy among all the tribes when the news of the new discovery spread over the country.—St Louis Republic.

Just So: Just So.

The subtile line dividing genius and insanity is so delicate that in many instances it can not be defined, it can only be felt. Even the deep researches of physiological-psychology are unable to designate principles of which the judgment can depend for logical deductions on the subject, and the searching analysis and arguments of many erudite students and philosophers are as incomprehensible and meaninless to the ordinary mind as the vain vaporings of a mind unhinged.—N. Y. Mail and Express.

Looking Out for No. 1.

"Well, you have picked out a nice husband for your daughter," said one of the guests at a fashionable New York wedding.

"Do you know anything about him?" asked the bride's father.

"Certainly I do. He is nothing but a penniless gambler."

"Why didn't you come and tell me this before the marriage?"

"Because he owes me two hundred dollars. Take me for a fool?"—Texas Siftings.

OLD GOLD WORKERS.

Alchemists' Recipes Contained in Ancient Manuscripts.

There is a papyrus which gives receipes for various alloys used in the manufacture of cups and vases; for making gold and silver ink; for gilding and silvering, and for testing the purity of precious metals. Other receipes teach the method of falsifying them by adding baser metals—an operation called the diplosis, or doubling, for the mass of the gold and silver was doubled, while their color remained unchanged; and, as the compiler of the manual remarks, a skilled workman would find it difficult, or even impossible, to detect the fraud.

The recipes which recur most frequently describe various modes of preparing asem, a word which originally meant a natural alloy of gold and silver, known to the Greeks as electrum. It was at first looked upon as a distinct metal, was considered sacred to Jupiter, and was designated by the sign of that planet; but at a later period the name was applied to all alloys, and M. Barthelot remarks that in this fact seems to lie the explanation of the origin of alchemy. Both gold and silver could be extracted from genuine asem, and it seemed as though it could be changed at the will of the operator into either one or the other; it could also be made artificially by mingling gold and silver, or closely imitated by some of the numerous alloys, eleven or twelve varieties of which are described in the papyrus of Leyden. It would seem, therefore, that from this fact there arose some vague notion that perhaps the imitation of the precious metals and the reproduction of their essential qualities could be brought to such perfection that the counterfeit might become identical with the reality.

The clear and simple language of these recipes is very different from the obscure and mystical jargon of the alchemists. The following, for instance, occurs three times, with slight variations: "To make asem — Tin, twelve drachmas; mercury, four drachmas; Chian earth, two drachmas. Melt the tin, add the earth in powder, then the mercury; stir with a piece of iron." With regard to another recipe nearly similar, M. Berthelot remarks that the result would be an amalgam of tin for the purpose of whitening copper. Another runs: "Take four parts of tin four times refined, three parts of white copper and one part of asem. Melt them and refine them several times; then make whatever you wish, it will be asem of the first quality, which will deceive even the workman." The white copper just mentioned is prepared, as another recipe shows, by mixing it with a sulphide of arsenic.

According to the recipe which teaches how to give a ring the appearance of gold, so that it will stand the test of the touchstone, "two parts of lead and one of gold must be reduced to a fine powder, mixed with gum and rubbed on the ring, which is then heated. This must be repeated several times, till the ring is well colored. It will be hard to discover the fraud, for the ring, if rubbed, will give a trace of gold, and heat will destroy the lead." This recipe is remarkable as representing a very early method of gilding by means of lead, anterior probably to the discovery of quicksilver, which is not mentioned till the fifth century B. C.—Edinburgh Review.

GEORGE'S TROUSERS.

He Didn't Care to Wander Because They Had Strayed With Another Man.

"It happened that George and myself were in Corsicana working the trade," said a drummer the other day. "We got through by night, intending to take the south-bound train on the Houston & Texas Central railroad, George bound for Galveston and I for Bryan, the train reaching the latter place about two o'clock in the morning. When the train arrived at Corsicana we both entered the sleeper, George securing a lower berth and inviting me to share it with him until I had to get off. We soon went to bed and to sleep. I was aroused by the porter shaking me, saying: 'Get up, boss, and you must be quick or you will be too late; the train is at the depot now.' I jumped up hurriedly and pulled on my trousers. Just then I heard the conductor call out. 'All aboard!' and felt the train start. I grabbed my grip in one hand and an article I took for my coat in the other, and out I went in a hurry. As I reached the door I thought I heard George call to me, but I had no time to wait and jumped to the platform. As the sleeper passed me I saw George at one end of the windows gesticulating wildly and yelling at me. After the train passed by I started for the hotel. It then occurred to me to put on my coat. I started to do so, when, to my utter amazement, I found the garment I held was no coat, but a pair of trousers. It flashed on me in a moment that I had in the hurry taken George's trousers. Well, the train was gone and George with it, and there was nothing I could do. I thought it all over, and then sat down on the platform and laughed until I nearly had a fit.

"I met George about ten days afterward and as soon as he saw me he commenced swearing at me. I finally pacified him and got him to tell me the wind up of it. 'Well,' said George, 'I knew I was in an awful fix. You had my only pair of trousers. I tried to borrow or buy a pair from the conductor, porter, or anyone who had an extra pair, but they were all out of stock in that line. So I wired a friend of mine in Galveston to meet me on the arrival of the train at the depot with a pair.'

"George's friend received the telegram in time and was on the platform as the train pulled in, but, suspecting a joke of some kind, had gathered a crowd of the boys and taken them with him. When the train stopped George was at a window, and seeing his friend beckoned to him at once and whispered: 'Have you got em?' 'Got what?' said his friend. 'Why the trouser.' 'Oh yes,' said the friend, and held the package up. 'Hand it to me at once,' said George. 'No, no,' said the other, 'I will bring them in to you,' and in the car he went, accompanied by the crowd, and there they found George in bed. 'Why, are you sick?' inquired his friend. 'The devil, no; I'm not sick,' George replied, sulkily. 'Then what is the matter? Why are you in bed this time of day?' George hesitated awhile, and then, seeing it had to come, told the story. You never heard such a laugh as went up. George was soon fixed up all right, but he had to go with the boys and 'set 'em up.'"—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

You can Economize

By using Royal Baking Powder to the exclusion of all other leavening agents. The official analysts report it to be 27% greater in leavening strength than the other powders. It has three times the leavening strength of many of the cheap alum powders.

It never fails to make good bread, biscuit and cake, so that there is no flour, eggs or butter spoiled and wasted in heavy, sour and uneatable food.

Do dealers attempt, because times are dull, to work off old stock, or low grade brands of baking powder? Decline to buy them. During these times all desire to be economical, and

WASH DRESSES NOT WASHED.

French Women Trim "Wash" Goods With Lace and Ribbons.

It is curious to observe the different treatment of American and French wash dresses. With us everything is more or less subservient to the idea that the garment must eventually be consigned to the tub; and the lace, needlework and flouncings are all chosen with a view to laundering properties.

The Parisian gown of percale or gingham is as elaborately trimmed with filmy valenciennes and delicate ribbons as a challis or a silk, and is treated with the same seriousness, a gown costing a franc a meter receiving as much consideration as one whose material is worth four times that amount.

A French woman of fashion would never dream of wearing the freshly starched, simple little wash dresses that our women delight in.

An American woman, who dresses remarkably well, wrote over from Paris the other day to engage her country dressmaker for a month's sewing immediately on her arrival.

"I would not have my skirt waists and ginghams made by any one else than Miss Snip for the world," she said to a friend, who wondered that she preferred a New England seamstress to a Parisian coutouriere. "French women simply can not make a dress that can be put into a tub and laundered."—N. Y. Tribune.

Sustain the Sinking System.

This common sense injunction is too often unheeded. Business anxieties, overwork, exposure must and do cause mental and physical exhaustion, which lessens vigor and tells injuriously upon the system. That most beneficent of tonics and restoratives, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, effectually compensates for a drain of strength and loss of nerve power, regulates impaired digestion, arouses the dormant liver and renders the bowels active. It is, besides, a preventive of malarial and rheumatic ailments.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

I simply state that I am Druggist and Postmaster here and am therefore in a position to judge. I have tried many Cough Syrups but for ten years past have found nothing equal to Boschee's German Syrup. I have given it to my baby for Croup with the most satisfactory results. Every mother should have it. J. H. HOBBS, Druggist and Postmaster, Moffat, Texas. We present facts, living facts, of to-day Boschee's German Syrup gives strength to the body. Take no substitute.

DELANO DIARY

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

—Services were held in the Swedish church last Sunday evening.

—A tramp printer, just from Chicago, made us a short call on Monday.

—Rev. Henderson, of Howard Lake, exchanged pulpits with Rev. Davies of this place last Sabbath.

—A crew of railroad carpenters made some much needed repairs to the depot platform here this week.

—Rock for the foundation of Len Dedrick's new building on Railroad Avenue is being hauled.

—Charley Hawker's piece at the entertainment was splendid, but seemed to terminate rather abruptly.

—A game of ball between Waverly and Delano, last Sunday afternoon resulted in a score of 14 to 25 in favor of Delano.

—The Delano cornet band gave an open air concert Tuesday evening, the hall being occupied by the entertainment.

—P. E. Datko, who has been working around Minnetonka, left this week for Laramore, Dakota, to assist in harvesting.

—The bear was around a few days ago and on Monday the monkey and the men with a bag pipe put in an appearance.

—Several covered wagons passed through town Wednesday morning on their way to the west to assist in harvesting, presumably.

—The entertainment and supper given by the M. E. ladies, in the hall Tuesday evening was quite an enjoyable affair. Gross receipts $18.85.

--Prof. Bohn has raised his residence up and moved it back from the street a few feet and has a more pleasant place than previously.

—Mr. Caleb Gregg Bundy, of Quaker extraction, of the village Aurelia, Ia., delivered a discourse at the Methodist church on Sunday afternoon, to a small audience.

—We understand an eminent veterinary surgeon from a hundred miles or so to the west was called to attend a valuable but ailing equine near here this week.

--A couple of Minneapolis real estate men passed through town Tuesday, looking for good farms on which to invest money or trade city property for.

—A man with a petrified woman stopped off here Monday to exhibit her, but as he did not have the necessary two dollars with which to pay the license, left for Waverly.

—C. G. Phillips' Uncle Tom's Cabin Company played to a fair sized audience in their pavilion here Wednesday evening. The performance was very bum.

—We are in receipt of an announcement of the Pillsbury Academy, of Owatonna. The Fall term begins Sept. 6. The Academy fits students for any American College.

—Charley Weise is making rapid headway, these slack times in posting himself on the Mexican war. The little pamphlet he informs us is but one of 109 volumes on this interesting subject.

—Simon Weldele came near losing his elegant new residence one day last week, before it was quite ready for occupancy. Some waste covered with oil was left in the celler and took fire, it was discovered before harm was done.

—We are informed that a small strike took place at Excelsior last week, the men who were working for $1.50 a day asking for $1.75 resulting in the presence, in our village of four men "out of a job." It must be hard work that a man would refuse to do for $1.50 a day these times.

—Wednesday morning was one of the finest we have had this summer. With a bright sun, the thermometer indicating 60 degrees above zero, and a dew almost equal to a rain, the gentlest of balmy zephyrs barely stiring the leaves on the trees, one could not imagine how any other country could produce finer, nor even so enjoyable weather.

—Some of our business men were somewhat surprised, we hear, the past week on being confronted with small checks they had sent to the city and which had been returned to them unpaid. We are infomed the individual who so exultantly paraded to the public once upon a time, that he had made more money swearing old soldiers to their pension vouches than the GAZETTE and Assessor had in ready cash was among them for $27. Notwithstanding the John Sherman silver bill and the McKinley bill are both in full force, the "rich man" appears to have more trouble than the poor little boy had to exchange his wheat for "little red topped boots," under the good old Democratic laws he told us about.

--Brick $8 per 1000 at John Coolen's.

—If you need lime, call on John Coolen. 27.

—If you want brick go to John Coolen's.

--The Board of Education are to hold a meeting and organize on Saturday evening Aug. 5.

--The second meeting of the W. C. C. B. A., which was to have been held August 2d, has been indefinitely post poned.

—The Eagle complains of the G. N. Says she can't get a ticket, and the freight don't come to suit her. She finds fault with everything she can't run.

—Thomas Shaw says last night's shower was a good one, and that his corn seems about a foot higher this morning.

—One of the editors of the late Appleton Watchman says the "Eagle is off its base about a yard." That's nothing for her. She sometimes flies much wilder than that.

--A pleasant surprise party occurred at the home of Mrs. and August Sielof on Monday evening, it being the birthday of both of them. Mrs. Sielof was presented with a handsome rocking chair by the ladies.

—A rainbow social will be held in the G. A. R. hall at Rockford on Tuesday evening next. A good program has been arranged and a very interesting time is expected. Supper will also be served. Admission free.

--A gentleman representing the owners of the Delano Roller Mill is in town today, for the purpose of meeting Messrs. Johnson, of Belle Plain, and Cokato with whom he expects to complete a bargain for the mill.

--A very interesting letter from C. J. Buckley, who is now visiting in England, appeared in Eagle this week. Mr. Buckley thinks Minnesota is good enough for him and says he will be quite ready to return at the appointed time.

—A crowd of young people came over from Buffalo Wednesday afternoon to take in the Uncle Tom's Cabin entertainment in the evening, returning immediately after the performance, thoroughly disgusted with their trip.

—Our postmistress, Miss Tillie Eppel, was the recipient on Saturday, of an unique present, a rattle box, from August Winch, who has returned from Montana. The gift is one formerly in use by one of the most deadly serpents and consists of nine large rattles, which the young lady has hardly mustered up courage to touch as yet.

—The wonderful display in the heavens occuring Saturday night, July 15, was plainly visible here. Whether it was the chinch bugs or some other insects fanning the air, or whether it was an experiment by the man who is going to turn darkness into daylight, in the cities, and do away with other artificial lights, has not yet been determimed.

--Rumor says two of Delano's prominent citizens had a little war of their own Tuesday night. The heavier corps by a dexterious flank movement, succeeded in throwing a skirmish line, consisting of the entire right pedal extremity, completely to the rear of the enemy's forces, striking a severe blow in this quarter, when an immediate cessation of hostilities occurred. The combat was short, bloodless, and dacisive so far as reported.

—The following mathematical problem was handed us by a pedagogue a few days since. Try it: A and B buy 100 acres of land, jointly, for $500. Some parts of the land are better than others. They wish to divide the land between them, and A says to B, let me have my choice and I will take enough less to have paid 25 cents per acre more than you. How much land will each have when the hundred acres are divided?

--From the way that antiquated old bird, up street kicks this week, one would judge she had been electrocuted just a little. She is growing even more childish than ever or she would not insinuate in quite so plain terms that people who choose to advertise in other papers than the Eagle, or who prefer to read both sides of politics, or local affairs, in other words who refuse longer to have a pack of misrepresentations crammed down their throats week after week concerning, school, village, or individual affairs without an opportunity to see the other side, a clique of cranks and political parasites. As she quoted us before "this is a free country". People are not obliged to read one side only, and that a highly colored side, unless they choose to, and a good many don't choose to form their opinions altogether from the columns of the Eagle. Mr. Buckley we understand is, in a few weeks, to relieve the present editor-in-chief from his long and tedious task of steering the old bird, and of course it is but natural that she give a few vigorous kicks along towards the last. We would not from past history and present appearances be surprised if she comes out for David Hill when she changes.

County Cullings.

"Other People's Thoughts" in last week's Buffalo Journal, concerning "The Glorious Fourth" bears some marks of having been written by a "blarsted Englishman, dawn't yer knaw."

Superintendent Lindsley reports Miss Anna R. Quinn as being opposed to free text books because they in some cases gave the teachers trouble in regard to their use. We are glad to know that Delano has at least one teacher who is not afraid to oppose what she, from experience, knows to be wrong, even though the Superintendent is on the other side.

The present Democratic Board of County Commissioners, if they are possessed of an ordinary amount of "sand" will not be intimidated from discharging their duty by way of arranging for plenty of room and fixing up the court house in as good shape as it has ever been. What is the use of sitting around in those old dingy rooms with a treasury overflowing with money; loaned out to county banks and monied corporations, for a good deal less than ordinary rates, while many of the men who paid it in to the treasury are now in need of a job and are paying big interest on old debts. Let the contract to the lowest bidder to do the different kinds of work needed. Help as many men to work as you can these hard times. Reduce the dangerous surplus in the treasury for something that is needed and receive the thanks of your constituents for your faithful discharge of your trust.

Some of our Independent school board act as if they thought they were given the privilege of doing as they please, of making such rules and penalties as they see fit. Some of them have purchased Free Text books, before there was any law to that effect, and paid for them out of funds in the Treasury for other purposes. And now they seek to deprive the pupils of these "Free" books bought out of the public funds, unless they pay all damages the books have received from last terms usage. The penalty to deprive a pupil of all his books for a few cents wear and tear is exorbitant. Besides the board has no business, and there is no law for their keeping books from the pupils. The duty of the Board given in the school law is:

NINTH—To make rules and regulations respecting the protection, care and safe keeping of the property of the district, and to prescribe penalties for the breach thereof, to be recovered as penalties in other cases before a justice of the peace, and to change and repeal the same.

The law was made by our state legislature, and although it may not be to the liking of all the independent boards it appears to be what they have to go by, until there is a change in the law. This don't provide for the Independent Board piling up the FREE Text books and demanding PAY before the scholars can use the FREE books provided for them. If the board wants to sell the books there is a clause allowing them to do so if they make that the rule. The new law for Free text books, in speaking of the privileges of the Board says:

"And provide for the loan, free of charge, or sale at cost, of such text books to the pupils in attendance at such school or schools."

It is not the intention of the people that the board shall sell the books at a profit, that they shall go into the book business to make money, but they can either supply the school with books at cost, or if they see fit, can furnish them according to law, FREE. It any damages need collecting it must be done according to law, and not according to the whim of somebody who wants his own way "law or no law." People have had enough of this lawless way of doing business, and prefer to have things done as they should be, and in accordance with the statutes of the State of Minnesota.

BORN.

BRASIE.—On Monday, July 24, to Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Brasie, a son.

We can see no particular reason why the county Commissioners should not provide for more room for the increasing business of the county by arranging rooms in the capacious basement of the present court house. The Journal advocates this plan and we think it perfectly practicable. It need not however, on account of the suggestions of some, bury the Democratic officials there. Judge Alley or Auditor Lamson would be as safe and cool there as the Democratic officials. Sheriff Carpenter, too, might have an office on the lower floor.

Among Our Exchanges.

Frank Slocum, cashier of the post-office, and his family were yesterday poisoned by eating green cabbage. The family suffered considerable pain and were badly frightened, but no serious results are feared. It is supposed that Paris green had been sprinkled on the vegetable by the grower.—Minneapolis Journal.

The Todd County Argus of last week apologizes for mentioning a young lady as Mrs. H. S. King, as the young lady has not yet married Mr. King, although the Argus understood that she had. We know how to sympathize with the editor of the Argus. Last week the Journal mentioned that Mrs. C. H. Douglas was about to go out of the hotel business and get married. Mrs. Douglas says she is not going out of the business for the purpose of getting married, but to go to Wright county to live with her mother. Truly the Scriptures say that "Offenses must come, but woe be to him by whom the offense cometh."—Brainerd Journal.

An Antwerp letter to Lamson Bros. & Co., under date of July 9, gives the following particulars of the effects of the drought in Europe: "As you will have read in the papers, we have had in Belgium—and it is the same all over the continent—scarcely a drop of rain for weeks and months. There is scarcely any hay anywhere on the continent. There are districts in Belgium where simply nothing is growing. The fields are black with the dust and burnt by the sun. It is very sure that there will be many districts throughout the continent where there will be no hay whatever and where they will be forced to supply themselves from America with that and other feeding stuffs."—Minneapolis Journal.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

CONGRESSMAN Hall wants the Government to issue some more currency.

AS AN excuse for joining the calamity shriekers the Sherburne county Star says. "It makes a difference whose ox is gored."

VICE PRESIDENT STEVENSON and party, on their way home from the west, stopped off and looked over St. Paul and Minneopolis, on Wednesday. Adlai expects to be on hand when Congress convenes on Monday next.

THE Silver convention met in Chicago this week and heard Donnelly and others on the subject, and adopted a lengthy platform of principles. A. W. Thurman, son of Allen G. Thurman of Ohio, was chairman, and among the ablest speakers. Bi-metalism is what they want with a rate of 16 to 1, instead of the present 15 to 1, basis.

THE official head of Eugene Hay, of Minneapolis, United States District-Attorney, appears to be liable to drop. We don't see how Gene could very well expect to hold it up long under an administration against which he took such terrible strong grounds as to say in a speech at Delano a few years ago that "there is enough in the political history of every Democrat to damn him forever." Let 'er drop.

THAT mob that hung Hoke Smith in effigy, in Rome, Ohio, because a number of pensioners had been suspended, claiming that J. L. Reed, aged 83 years, who had "served four years and five months and his pension was his sole support" became a raving maniac on hearing that he had been cut off the pension roll, might have been in better business if they had endeavored to show cause why he should not have been suspended. Such actions as hanging and burning people at the stake or even in effigy belong to the dark ages and ought not to crop out in this enlightened country, and age. If the people have a grievance it is better to show it in a lawful and gentlemanly way than to resort to the tactics of barbarians.

THE St. Paul Daily Globe of Wednesday has an able editorial on "The Democratic Party of Minnesota" in which some solid facts are stated, and some good, wholesome advise given to the members of the party which since '57 have struggled for their faith with never but partial success. We most heartily endorse the sentiment, where after referring to the candidacy of Horace Greeley, I. Donnelly and others, the Globe says: "but the deserters which followed all such efforts have convinced the party that where one vote is gained by a departure from its time honored principles and the advice of its tried leaders, ten are lost, to say nothing of outraged conscience, and that 'honesty is the best policy' in politics as in everything else." This habit of running after strange gods and of of making mis-alliances with this and that so called organization has extended even into county and village affairs, and should cease.

The Drunkard.

Confirmed drunkards like the poor are always with us. Usually in their latter days they constitute a large percentage of the poor. Cities and towns have many of them, while villages and hamlets have their proportional share; each saloon generally finds enough work for one to help him pay for his drinks, and keep him on the list. Usually the old sot is an object of ridicule by his former associates. They look upon him as a man who has lost control of himself, who cannot govern his appetite for strong drink. They speak of him in derisive terms. They no longer call him Mr. So and So, but old so and so. People generally look upon him in a good deal the same way. Even the small boys in the street loose respect for him. So does his friends and family and even himself. He knows better than anyone else his condition. the degeneration to which he has fallen, and in his sober moments often threatens to do better; resolves to reform, to be found no more in the gutter, but to resume his place, where but for the intoxicating bowl he might ever have remained. For most of them it is too hard to keep the resolutions; they yield to the solicitations of those who should be above putting the bottle to their neighbors lips, or to their insatiable thirst, so called for the stimulant and again fall. The drunkard does not always die a drunkard, some of them reform by keeping entirely away from it, from where it is sold, from influences that may lead them on to the drunkards death. Among those who forsake the ways of wickedness and try to become men, are many shining lights of success. Some of them have given up the balance of their lives to try to lead others from the path of ruin, as Goff, Murphy, Woolley, and Smith. Some have shone in business, social or other positions, as stars of greater or less magnitude, for a season, only to fall again. While others have become noble examples of what men can become. Old drunkards didn't become so all at once. They were formerly moderate drinkers, could drink when they pleased and let it alone when they pleased, so they said. They seem to have chosen to to drink rather than not to do so. If you are a moderate drinker take warning. You do not want to, neither do you intend becoming an old drunkard.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 28, 1893.

Secretary Carlisle is the only member of the cabinet at present in Washington, and he has been confined to his house for several days this week by rheumatism, but next week President Cleveland and the other members of the cabinet will be here, as they have been notified that the President wishes to submit the first draft of his message to Congress to them and have a full and free discussion of its contents before it is finally completed.

Attempts are numerous at trying to guess the nature of the President's coming message, but it is nonsense for anyone outside of a few close personal friends of Mr. Cleveland—and they won't talk about it—to pretend to know. The mere fact that he will send another message to Congress at the opening of the regular session, even should the extra session remain in session until then, and the general belief is that it will, makes it presumable that his message to the extra session will be confined to what it was called to legislate upon—finance. And if this presumption be correct it will not indicate any change of opinion as to the necessity for tariff and other reforms advocated by the democratic party during the last campaign. Merely that circumstances have made it necessary to take up finance first.

Speaking of reform, Commissioner Lochren is going right ahead in the program mapped out far the reformation of the pension roll, notwithstanding the howel that is being raised by a few Congressmen whose constituents have been suspended. It has already been discovered that, in addition to the large number of pensions granted under the last administration without proper examination of the applicant and his papers, there were thousands granted illegally, knowingly and willfully. Only those granted under the act of 1890 have yet been examined and no others can be taken up for a long time. The supensions up to date numbered nearly 6,000, and if the same average be kept up in the entire 370,000 pensions granted under that law the total number of suspensions will be something like 75,000. The examination is very thorough and systematic and only those cases showing clearly some irregularity or doubt of the right of the pensioner to receive the amount he has been getting are suspended, and few, if any, of those who get restored to the roll upon a re-examination will get as large a pension as they have been receiving.

"Senator Gorman," remarked a friend af the man who has proven his right by his ability on many occasions to be classed as a democratic leader, "never announces through the newspapers his future political intentions, and that fact is so well known that he very seldom takes the trouble to contradict the newspaper stories which appear from time to time purporting to give in detail what he intends to do in case this or that happens in the Senate. It is safe to say, however, that his future actions, like those of the past, will always be such as will meet the approval of a majority of good democrats, and to say also that any advrnce announcements of them which may appear may always be set down as merely guesses."

One of the most encouraging signs to those who expect financial relief from the legislation of the extra session is the fact that, while most of the democratic Senators and Representatives have ideas of their own as to the legislation needed, a majority of them express themselves as willing to hear the arguments of those who advocate other ideas, and to be open to conviction if the other fellow's argument be the best. If this feeling be shared by a majority of the democrats in both House and Senate the difficulty of reaching some satisfactory basis of compromise will be greatly lessened. But it is going to take time to bring about that result, and wise people will not expect immediate Congressional action on the important subject. Good legislation is better than hurried legislation, and I have yet to find the first democrat who does not firmly believe that good legislation will be one of the certanties of the Fifty-third Congress.

Gen. Ducan S. Walker, chairman of the committee on investigations of the centenial celebration of the laying of the corner stone of the Capitol building, to be held September 18, next, this week sent invitations to the governors of all the states and their staffs to participate. President Cleveland has promised to introduce the principal speaker at the celebration, who will be Mr. William Wirt Henry, of Virginia, a decendent of Patrick Henry.

Christopher Willcutt, of Minneapolis, was visiting his brother Zimri last week.

Next Monday Congress meets in extra session to see what they can do to alleviate the sorrows of the people. We would first recommend an emetic or a heavy dose of physic, but we think it will be a long time before Congress gets down to business.

Mr. Almon Shaver, of Wis., has been visiting his sister, Mrs. George Hosington.

James Personett has returned from the old Hoosier state. He is quite well satisfied with Minnesota.

BUFFALO BUSINESS.

Mr. Engstrom and family of St. Paul have been spending a week's vacation visiting friends in Buffalo.

Dr. and Mrs. Dean, of Minneapolis, spent Sunnay with Mrs. Dean's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. R. Coyart.

Dr. Chase, of Minneapolif, visited on Tuesday of this week, with Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Shimmuin.

ROCKFORD.

Harvest has commenced, some of the grain being cut appears to be quite green yet. The crop will be very poor considerable damage having been done by the recent hot weather and the chinch bugs.

D. R. Thompson is laying in a large supply of lumber for the fall trade and Harry Young ships two or three cars of box stuff a week.

The M. E. Rainbow Social Thesday evening was a success; after rendering a good program consisting of vocal and instrumental music, tableaus, etc., supper was served in the lower hall.

Rev. Baker, of Monticello, preached an open air sermon at Johnson Bros'. corner Tuesday evening.

Miss Carrie Florida has returned from Chicago, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Hatch. Miss Jessie Florada is also spending a few weeks at home.

Rockford was awakened Monday morning by a cry and the sound of a lash falling heavily upon something. Upon investigating it was found that Henry Sacket, a Mormon, who lately returned from Salt Lake City, Utah, had strapped his boy, aged about 8 years, to a tree and was unmercifully whpping him with a whip. When rescued the boy was very sick his back was badly lacerated and a couple of gashes were on his face. Several of the blows haying brought blood. O. C. Roberts and Elder Warner immediately drove to Buffalo and a warrant was issued, and he was arrested and taken to Buffalo. He plead guilty and was given 15 days in jail. E. E. Darrow took him to the Hennepin county jail where he will serve his sentence which he rightly deserves. Excitement was high in the village and talked of whipping him and tar and feathering him. This is not the first time he has ill treated the child, and it is intended to make it warm for him if it is ever repeated.

The Soo Line changed time Monday, the 31st. The passengers leave as follows now: Morning east 8:15, morning west 10:47, afternoon east 3:22, afternoon west 6:48, and trains now run to Minot, N. D. It is expected that the road will be completed to the International boundry about Sept 1st.

LONG LAKE.

E. H. Brown, of Moorehead, spent Sunday in Long Lake, visiting his brother, E. L.

Our town board let several road contracts on Saturday. There has been considerable road work done in Orono during the last few months by both town and county boards and the roads within the town are once more in a good condition.

The prospect tor an average yield of wheat in this county is not very encouraging. That which withstood the drouth is being damaged by the chinch bug, and in consequence several of our farmers are cutting and curing considerable of the present growth of wheat into feed for stock, to be used during the coming winter, replacing to some extent the shortage of the hay crop, and in the end the farmer may not be any more damaged by the chinch bug than if he had succeeded in maturing his wheat without injury from that insect and been compeled to sell it at the extremely low price now prevailing and in prospect.

Henry Cox and W. J. Heberlain visited "Brother" Gardner, at St. Paul, who is still remaining there under treatment for his throat. They report that while there is littte improvement in the patients condition, it is not immediately dangerous, and that there are prospects of his recovering a fair degree of health at least, if not his usual health.

The correspondence of the Eagle has been quite busy of late carpentering still he finds time during his leisure hours to gather locals and to gallant the ladies.

D. C. Clinton (P. H. Kelley's Salesman) and Mrs. Clinton are spending their summer on Bracket's Point, where they are enjoying the breezes of Lake Minnetonka.

A row of no small dimensions over badges and beer occured at the Swedish picnic at Spring Park on last Sunday between the picnicers and a lot of young bloods of the vincinity of Lake Minnetonka. The Y. B. apparently got their work in, for a time, in good shape when, on discovering that the Scandinavians were becoming to numerous, they beat a hasty retreat, scattering and escaping through friendly timber and brush near by.

"He who fights and runs away, may live to fight another day."

Against the Elevator Law of the Governor.

HENNING, Minn. Aug. 1.—The farmers' elevator at this place closed last night until Sept. 1. In the meantime the stockholders will hold a meeting and decide what action will be taken in regard to scoring the "Nelson" elevator law. The sentiment thus far seems to be in favor of testing the constitutionality of the law, and all the Farmers' elevator associations along the Fergus Falls branch of the Northern Pacific railway feel about the same in regard to the matter, and bitter in their denunciation of the governor's pet grain law, and under its present construction by the railroad and warehouse commission, is likely to be quite an important one in the political campaign next year.—Globe.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THAT BOTHERSOME LAW.

There's not a journal in the land,
From farthest East to Arkansas;
But every day has much to say
Of silver and the Sherman law.

In interviews with leading men,
Their saptint thoughts they all parade;
And every one has much to say
Upon the Law that Sherman made.

The silver question's the refrain
That Keeps old Uncle Sam awake;
And all his subjects sing the song
Till wearied brains with ennui ache.

Oh! that some great Napoleon
Of finance would arise to-day,
And solve this problem of the hour—
Then would the nation truly say:

"Deliverer of America!
Our gratitude to the we pay;
A nation's credit has been saved—
Financial ruin fsreed away!"

Another congress will convene;
God grant the session short may prove!
And that this question of finance
Some able genius well may solve.

With broken banks on every hand,
The outlook seemeth far from bright;
But none for long have need to fear,
For in the end will all come right.

The God of nations o'er has watched
The progress of this noble land;
And guided it through every trial
To safety by his loving hand.

—Sawyer, in St. Paul Globe.

o

Germ Life in Ice.

The ice supply of a city or a large town is not usually as free from pollution as the water supply. Because the water has been frozen it is not necessarily freed from impurities. The great demand for cold drink leads most hotels and boarding houses to put ice in the water. This is, of course, a much cheaper way of cooling the potable water than letting it stand in the ice chamber or refrigerator, but families are under no necessity of cooling the drink in this way. A large earthen pitcher filled with pure water and covered with the thick folds of a towel con stand constantly in the refrigerator and furnish safely the household drinking water.—The Healthy Home.

Poison in Cigarettes.

Each manufacturer of cigarettes has his own formula of poisons, which he adds to the cheap tobacco from which his cigarettes are manufactured, so that the user of a particular brand soon finds himself wedded to it through the contraction of a drug habit, thus making him a steady customer. It would seem that nothing would be more findish than such a scheme for creating business. Every boy who smokes cigarettes may be regarded as a prospective drunkard, or, if not to be a drunkard, certainly an opium slave or a lunatic. No man can indulge long in this fascinating and pernicious habit without becoming wrecked in mind and body thereby.—Good Health.

o

Golden Grain.

Religion cannot rise above the state of the victory.—Emerson.

"Souls grow more by contact with souls than by all other means."

Who suspends one law of nature suspends them all.—L. Feuerbach.

"Money is not requred to buy one necessary of the soul."

"The blow from a knife may be easily cured; not so a blow from the tongue."

"Bigotry is a kind of rheumatism, which twists a man's soul into all sorts of deformities."

"Always be loyal to clear ideas. If you see that a thing is so true that its opposite is inconceivable, stick to it."

"The first step in rectifying an error is to probe and analyze it so as to discover its real nature and dimensions."

There are no miracles in the realm of science. The real philosopher does not seek to excite wonder, but to make that plain which was wonderful. He does not endeavor to astonish, but to enlighten.—Ingersoll.

Enfranchisement does not mean freedom, since the enfranchised are capable of running in a brainless and compact mob after any man who is clever enough to gain despotic influence over them.—Ellis.

o

Housekeepers Should Remember

That there are few servants so thorough that they should not inspect the refrigerator daily to see that no liquids are spilled or food allowed to spoil and contaminate the rest.

That dish water, which is always impregnated with more or less vegetable matter, should never be thrown on the surface of the ground at the back door.

That all tubs and basins in bath rooms and kitchen sinks and drains should be flushed with hot water on every weekly washing day.

That sulphate of iron (copperas) and choloride of lime, two of the best disinfectants, are but ten cents a pound, and plentiful use of either in sinks and open drains during the summer and autumn may prevent that dreaded disease, typhoid fever.

That powdered borax, plentifully used, will exterminate cockroaches and water bugs.

That no hamper or other receptacle of soiled clothing, no matter how handsomely decorated, should be kept in a sleeping apartment.—K.B.J. in Alabamy Cultivator.

THE newspapers have reported an unusual number of "sad drownings" this summer and not a single jolly or hilariously happy one.

WITH one president in the chair, another in jail and a third in the United States, Nicaragua has an embarrassment of riches in that line.

THE July poetry is all in now and the magazines are working on the August stock. Autumn verses, and those that read lessons of life in the falling leaves, will soon be along.

PRINCESS TOM, one of Sitka's richest women, has lately been Christianized, and as an evidence of good faith has discharged two of the three husbands she had previously married.

THE Wells-Fargo people have just started a new bank in New York despite the fact that several second-hand ones, only slightly worn, could have been obtained at a ridiculously low price.

A CORONER in Minnesota has decided that when a man has been adjudged dead by the coroner he is dead, even though he return to the bosom of his family in good health and exuberant spirits.

A SIX-YEAR-OLD Tennessee boy can play on almost any musical instrument without teaching. That is what Tennessee gets for having once upon a time elected a man governor because he could fiddle.

STATISTICS from sixty cities which contain more than 20,000 inhabitants by the census of 1890 show that out of 17,095 fires 203 were attributed to electricity and that the loss was $1.25 for each $100.

HON. GEORGE S. BOUTWELL, when elected governor of Massachusetts, was the youngest person ever elected to that office. Now he is the senior exgovernor of the state as well as the oldest in years.

A NEBRASKA farmer recently lost $3,000 by the collapse of a bank. The Missouri river was seized with an insane desire to change its course and scooped out one hundred acres of the Nebraskan's land.

THE Railway Gazette has counted up and finds that there have been eighty-six train robberies or attempts at train robbery during the first six months of 1893. The railroads will have to carry armed guards in a steel-clad car just aft of the tender if this thing is kept up, and it will be kept up as long as it continues to be so "dead easy."

THEY are bobbing up serenely on every hand, these lineal descendants of Columbus, and soon they will be as numerous as George Washington's body servants. The latest accession to the ranks is a remarkable person even granting that he is mistaken in his assumed relationship to the great explorer. He is 104 years old and is in Chicago taking in the world's fair.

BALTIMORE is to have two sprinkling cars at work upon the electric lines of that city this summer. Each car carries a tank with a capacity of 2,300 gallons of water, which wets down six miles of road alongside the track. This system is available in every city where there are electric railroads, and bids fair to supersede carts as well as watering pots in all the principal thoroughfares.

ABERDEEN, S. D., has an "International Cold Wave company," with a capital stock of $1,000,000. Its business will be to produce cooling breezes whenever the temperature reaches the uncomfortable stage. The company will not only furnish comfortable summer weather to order, but will be open to inducements to bring early frosts for the benefit of wheat bulls. Letters of inquiry from proprietors of skating rinks, summer hotels and cough medicines are invited.

THE "recovered city of Lachish" in Palestine is one of the most interesting as well as one of the most important of archæological discoveries in the Orient. This ancient city is mentioned in Joshua, and its site was unknown until three years ago, when Prof. Petrie happened upon its ruins while digging in a vast mound known locally as Tel-el-Hesy. The great importance of the "find" lies in the fact that there are eight ancient towns beneath the mound, each (except the first) built on an older abandoned town.

R. B. HAYES was the only occupant of the white house to die of heart disease. Washington expired of pneumonia: John Adams of natural decline; Jefferson of diarrhea; Madison and Monroe of natural decline; John Quincy Adams of paralysis; Jackson of consumption; Van Buren of catarrh; Harrison of pleurisy; Tyler of a bilious attack; Polk of chronic diarrhea; Taylor of bilious fever; Fillmore of natural decline; Pierce of inflammation of the stomach; Buchanan of gout; Lincoln assassinated; Johnson paralysis; Grant of cancer; Garfield assassinated; Arthur of Bright's disease.

AMONG the many proverbs that have been smashed by the modern scientific iconoclast is that one which runs: "Early to bed and early to rise makes one healthy, wealthy and wise." An eminent London physician has been making a study of the subject and finds that eighty per cent. of the people over eighty years of age have been in the habit of sitting up until the small hours and never rising until the day is well aired. "Early rising," says the doctor, "tends to exhaust the physical powers and shorten life." There ought to be great consolation in this for small boys and newspaper men.

THE last census bulletin contains the statistics of the smallest religious organization in the United States. It is the Adonai Shomo, with twenty members and property worth $6,000. It has no church or temple for worship. This community was organized at Petersham, Mass., in 1876, with eleven members. It grew out of the adventist movement and its principles are faith in Christ as the Son of God and a community of goods. There is a common treasury from which individual needs are supplied. All labor is common. Agriculture is the chief industry. Women members have an equal voice with the men.

SIAM ALARMED.

France Makes a Move Which Creates Uneasiness in Bangkok—Her Fleet Has Been Increased—Notice of a Second Blockade Issued and British Warships Ordered to Get Outside of Its Limits.

BANGKOK, Aug. 1.—The uneasiness among the people here, far from lessening, is increasing. Seven more French gunboats have arrived at Koh-Si-Chang, making a total of thirteen now here. Negotiations are still going on, but the progress made is not reported. The intentions of the French are awaited with fear and apprehension. Rear Admiral Humann, commanding the French squadron, has issued a second blockade notice, to take effect three days from Saturday. He will order the British war ships Pallas and Swift, now lying off Bangkok, to go outside the blockade limits. M. Pavie, the French minister resident, has gone to Saigon and Rear-Admiral Humann is under direct orders from Paris. Unless the French government interposes quickly an attack on Bangkok seems certain. The trading community is surprised that Humann is still allowed a free hand.

PARIS, Aug. 1.—The ambiguous tone of the cabinet in accepting Siam's surrender has excited much comment. It is generally understood that this tone was adopted for the purpose of soothing international susceptibilities. It is stated on high authority that France intends to take decisive steps to insure the Siamese carrying out the terms of the ultimatum. The blockade of the Siamese port will be continued, it is said, until France's demands are satisfied. The French force now in Siamese waters is believed to be sufficient to make the blockade effective.

The general opinion here is that the issue of the controversy is a triumph for France over English diplomacy. It is believed in diplomatic circles there will be no disagreement between France and England in the deliimination of the frontier. It is also believed that China will not meddle with the matter.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—It was learned at the admiralty office that the English government is much puzzled over the latest turn of affairs in Siam, by which France, after having apparently arranged everything with Great Britain on terms most satisfactory to Britain, has declared a new blockade to begin Wednesday. The foreign office's advices from Bangkok agree with the newspaper telegrams announcing that Admiral Humann has said the new blockade is in obedience to instructions direct from Paris to him. Yet the latest information the foreign office has had through Lord Dufferin is that France has accepted Siam's terms, and proposed to arrange the details upon a peace basis. While the foreign office would say nothing officially it was plainly much perplexed over the conduct of France, and fears that this new move is a repetition of that singular conduct of last week, when a blockade was begun without notifying England.

PARIS, Aug. 1.—Lord Dufferin has obtained from the French government assurance that the question of the Shan states will be settled in the manner desired by England. This means that they will be restored to Siam, which had no right to cede them.

The embassy is now engaged in active telegraphic communication with the foreign office at London. The Siamese question has for the present no gravity. Siam's submission is accepted, though ungraciously, and the blockade will not take place. The negotiations with England will probably last some time.

A Paris correspondent says it has been learned from good authority that France demands as security from Siam that the terms of the ultimatum shall be carried out at Chantaboon, a town near the Gulf of Siam; also that Siam shall establish no military station at certain named places near the frontier of Cambodia or within a certain distance of the Mekong river.

A SHORT CROP.

The Wheat Fields of England Yield Poorly.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—The Mark Lane Express, in its weekly review of the British grain trade, says:

"Where the wheat crop is bad, it is very bad. Where it is good, it is barely good. The average yield is not expected to exceed 27 bushels to the acre, which will make a total of 7,087,500 quarters, against 8,000,000 quarters in 1892. The growth of root crops, including potatoes, has been highly favorable lately. The cool, showery weather has been advantageous only to oats and barley in backward districts. There will probably be a fair second hay crop and an improvement in the pastures. There is a reduced demand in the market for all sorts of feeding stuffs."

McClaughry Quits.

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—Maj. R. W. McClaughry retired from the superintendency of the police force Monday and Michael Brennan, the assistant superintendent, assumed charge temporarily. It is rumored that Maj. McClaughry will soon accept the superintendency of the Pontiac state reform school for boys.

A Maine Man Appointed.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—The president has appointed Charles B. Morton, of Maine, fourth auditor of the treasury, vice John R. Lynch, of Mississippi, resigned.

OUT OF WORK.

Chicago Reports Fully 150,000 Unemployed Men Within Her Borders, and the Number Growing Larger Daily.

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—Twelve hundred unemployed workingmen reached Chicago Monday from the west. Most of them came in on freight trains. There was not one of the dozen western roads but that carried its quota. These men who are coming to Chicago on these freight trains are silver miners from Colorado, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico and Idaho. All their mines are closed. Utah does not have such an exodus, because it is an agricultural country. Arizona is affected but little, because its mining is largely of copper. All along the line freight trains are black with men coming east. They beat their way, take possession of trains, or in some way get along.

Commissioner Allen of the county board offered a resolution in view of the incoming of these miners to the effect that a penalty be provided against railroads for bringing paupers into the county. It was referred to the county attorney to see whether any authority for such could be found in the statutes of Illinois.

The close of work at the world's fair grounds left 40,000 idle men on the market, which was already carrying from 50,000 to 75,000. It is now estimated that no less than 150,000 artisans are walking the streets looking for employment. That many of these will suffer for the actual necessities of life this winter seems a certainty, and that their presence in the city is a constant menace to the stability of the labor market appears an equal certainty.

TOPEKA, Kan., Aug. 1.—The stream of idle workmen from Colorado continues to pour through Kansas. Reports received by the police department are that a great many depredations have been committed in the towns along the lines of the Santa Fe and Union Pacific railroads. Houses have been broken into and valuables stolen both in the towns and country.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 1.—Sunday night every cell in the police stations was occupied by voluntary prisoners, miners en route from Kansas and Colorado to the cities of the east in the hope of securing work. Over 300 spent the night in the stationhouses, and after breakfast furnished by the officials they left in droves for the east. Trainmen coming from the Missouri river say that there is not a freight train running eastward but carries from twenty-five to fifty tramps.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Aug. 1.—The big Amoskeag mills were closed Monday. This is the first suspension of these factories for many years; 8,000 operatives are idle. The Jefferson mills started up again Monday morning, thus giving employment to 1,000 hands who had been idle for two weeks. All the remaining Amoskeag mills are certain to resume work August 28, if not before, but it will be on the basis, it is stated, of a reduction of wages to operatives. It is said that there will be a general reduction of 10 per cent. and those receiving better wages than the average will be cut down 15 per cent.

NEWARK, N. J., Aug. 1.—The proprietors of the Arlington Sand Paper company have announced that until further notice the mills will work but forty hours a week. Until lately they have been very busy. The superintendent said that the condition of the building trade and the stringent money market affected the usual heavy orders for the fall trade. The Arlington Celluloid & Cellonite company will be closed on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. This company has in its employ between 200 and 300 hands.

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 1.—The Cleveland Rolling Mill comyany has closed its plate, wire and rod mills and steel works, throwing 3,000 men out of employment. Lack of orders is the cause, there being no disagreement regarding wages. Five hundred men are still at work around the small mills and in putting up a new steel mill. Two hundred more men will be laid off as soon as the present supply of coke at one of their furnaces is exhausted.

CHICAGO'S SALOONS.

Strong Probability That About 3,000 of Them Will Be Closed Up Before January 1.

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—One thousand of Chicago's 7,279 saloons will probably close between now and September 1. Unless conditions now existing shall change it is said that 2,000 more will go out of business before January 1. The wholesale reduction in the number of drink resorts will be brought about by the action of the brewers. The majority of them have determined not only to cease paying licenses for saloons, but also to refuse further credit. Thousands of notices to this effect have been sent to saloonkeepers during the last week.

To-day the issue of licenses for the three-months period begins. For this license $125 is paid. Aside from the three Anglo-American companies there are thirty-eight or thirty-nine independent breweries in this city. The keen competition for business long ago instituted among the brewers a custom of granting credit of a kind scarcely known in other lines of business. Breweries fitted up saloons for men starting in the business, taking mortgages for the fixtures. They paid the keeper's license fee and gave him credit for the beer he purchased. Last year they generally ceased supplying saloon equipments. To-day they will inaugurate a further tightning of their policy.

Desperate State of Affairs in Peru.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 1.—John Hicks, of Wisconsin, who returns to this country after four years' service as minister to Peru, says that affairs in Peru are in anything but an encouraging state, and that the country is all but bankrupt. The silver question has already become a serious problem, and the whole country is in a state of political unrest pending an election of president to succeed the present incumbent. Before the elections, however, a revolution which is now threatening may throw Peru into internecine war.

Will Reduce the Mexican Army.

CITY OF MEXICO, Aug. 1.—It is expected that President Diaz will soon issue a decree outlining a plan for considerable reduction of the army, requiring the disbanding of four or five thousand men. This is part of the programme of economy decided on by the administration, which is determined to make all possible sacrifices in order to pay interest on the foreign debt.

Death of Dr. L. R. Brigham.

AURORA, Ill., July 31.—Dr. L. R. Brigham, for thirty-five years a prominent physician of this city, died Sunday night after a long illness.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Cost of Education.

Prof. Hyde, assistant superintendent of public instruction, has prepared a statement of the cost of education in the state. He shows that the cost of maintaining the public schools of Minnesota each year is $3,100,000, and the annual cost of all the public educational institutions in the state, exclusive of those at Faribault, is $3,339,000. The cost of the high schools is $38,000, and the university $140,000. Of the university support, $75,000 is received from the national government and $65,000 from the state. The annual cost of the normal schools is $84,000, and that of teachers' institutes and summer training schools $27,000. Of the total cost of the schools, $410,000 is received from the government, $600,000 from the state 1-mill tax, making in all $1,200,000; from licenses and fines collected by county auditors, $90,000; and from the special tax levy by districts, $1,400,000.

At this rate the annual cost per pupil in the common schools is $10, but including university education and the entire system it is $11. The cost in the common schools is divided between the funds as follows: Given by the general government, $1.25; state tax, $2.25; district compulsory tax, $2; voluntary tax, $4.50. The cost of the teachers' institution is $2.66⅔ per pupil.

The New Capitol.

The capitol commission is experiencing considerable trouble in selecting a site for the new capitol authorized by the last legislature, and people are beginning to think that nothing will be done in the matter until the next legislature. The commission is limited to the expenditure of $2,000,000 for site and building complete. The bids for the site opened at the June meeting were so high that the commission refused to consider them on the ground that they would involve the necessity of asking an additional appropriation, which would be actively opposed by the country members. It is intimated that unless the price fixed for the sites offered is cut in two no move towards building will be made before the next legislature.

After the Railroads.

Despite the St. Paul & Duluth's declared determination to test the constitutionality of the law requiring trains to stop at all county seats through which they pass, County Attorney Roberts will continue the fight in behalf of Pine City. Whether the first case goes to the supreme court of the United States (as it probably will) or not, he says there will be further arrests and prosecutions so long as the Duluth limited fails to make stops at Pine City. Mr. Roberts is confident that the city has a good case.

Dangerous Convict.

At the St. Cloud reformatory a convict assaulted Guard Julian A. Belden, who had reported him in the morning for misconduct. He struck the guard on the back of the head a murderous blow with a piece of gaspipe three feet long, cutting a gash. A second blow on the side broke two ribs and injured the spine. Belden staggered away. The convict followed to finish him when help arrived. The guilty convict's name is said to be Harrington, in for robbing a house in Minneapolis in daylight.

White Cappers.

J. P. Ahern and Harvy Tisdale, proprietors of the saloon in Goodhue, were arrested charged with being implicated in a white cap raid on complainants against Goodhue blind pigs last fall. The hearing was adjourned. Andrew Bergman was sent to the penitentiary for this offense last fall.

BINDING TWINE.

Trying to Reach an Agreement to Raise the Price.

NEW YORK, July 20.—John Good states that he has agreed on behalf of the John Good Cordage Manufacturing Company with the National Cordage, on a basis of prices for binding twine, sisal and manila rope, which are very much higher than those which are now ruling. Assaults Upon Health

Are frequently committed by people who dose themselves with violent purgatives. Nothing but ultimate injury can be reasonably expected from such medicines, and yet, upon the smallest occasion, many unwise people use them repeatedly. If the bowels are costive, the most efficacious laxative is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which never convulses and gripes the intestines, while it thoroughly regulates them and insures healthful action of the liver, stomach and kidneys. Use it in rheumatism and malaria.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime, and read the Label.

PROVIDENCE COTTAGE.

Why Captain Sol Buddle Concluded He Wouldn't Build It.

"'Providence cottage,' Mrs. Pringle, ma'am, it shall be," said Capt. Sol Buddle firmly, as he passed his huge cup for another cup of tea, and wiped his forehead with a red bandana handkerchief.

"Well, captain," said Mrs. Pringle, in tones of amiable acquiescence, "you being a scholard, and having book-learning moreover, it isn't for me to gainsay you."

"Mrs. Pringle, ma'am," said the captain, emphatically rapping his spectacle case on the table, "your sentiments do you honor. When a man comes to my time of life"—

Mrs. Pringle made a little deprecatory movement of her pretty fat hand.

The captain smiled, well pleased. "Ah, Mrs. Pringle, ma'am, that's the poetry oozing out of you; you're chock-full of it. I say when a man comes to my time of life"—

"Only forty-five, Capt. Buddle," softly suggested Mrs. Pringle.

The captain bowed courteously. "Not being used to the society of amiable ladies like yourself, Mrs. Pringle, I don't quite know how to undeceive you as to my years."

He paused, a piece of buttered toast in his hand, and looked round Mrs. Pringle's cozy sitting-room, warm with the heat of a glowing sea-coal fire. Also, his thoughts went back to the society of various nautical ladies he had known whose manners lacked the repose which distinguished Mrs. Pringle's.

Mrs. Pringle also paused, teapot in hand, to cast a pensive glance at the gallant sailor opposite.

Outside, tumultuous waves beat noisily against the shingly shore, as if insisting that Capt. Sol Buddle should be delivered up to them; inside, the only sound which broke the stillness was a pensive mew from Mrs. Pringle's Persian cat. The captain paused again, took up the cat and thoughtfully poured out some milk for it. "My cat on board the 'Morning Star' would never take his milk without a spoonful of grog in it," he said, reminiscently; "but he tried it too much for his strength; he was always ambitious, that cat was—too ambitious. Laid himself out to eat up all the ship's cockroaches, though he knew they'd disagree with him; and there was a funeral soon after—his funeral. He took a lot of cockroaches with him, too—as many as he could hold, poor chap." Capt. Buddle heaved a sigh to the memory of his departed favorite.

"As to my years," he resumed, "they—"

The quiet Mrs. Pringle, who was not much given to interruptions, did a most unusual thing—she interrupted the captain again—for the third time. "A man is as young as he looks," she said. "And you, Capt. Buddle, don't look a day over forty-five."

The captain again bowed with nautical grace. "Seeing you've set your mind on it, Mrs. Pringle, we'll make it so; though, if any questions are asked, the facts will go against it."

"No one will be so impertinent," said Mr. Pringle, as she looked pensively down at her pretty slipper.

The captain passed his cup for more tea, a beverage to which he had lately taken a great fancy; its novelty appealed to him most strongly. In his seafaring days at this hour—like the departed cat—he had generally partaken of a soothing beverage with rum in it. But the widow had gradually weaned the captain from such an unladylike beverage as rum in the daytime, and he found ever fresh delight in tea—tea with cream in it—tea by the bucket—tea containing four lumps of sugar to each supply. At ten o'clock every night, however, the widow's fair hands brewed her lodger what he was facetiously wont to call "a stiff nor'wester." Then, the captain sat thoughtfully by the fire, living his voyages over again, and full of simple, reverent thankfulness that he had been spared to drift into such a pleasant haven of peace.

Mrs. Pringle continued to knit, as the cat drowsily purred on the captain's knee. The captain put down his cup and took up the plan of a very snug, two-storied cottage, with a veranda running all round it. "'Providence cottage,' it shall be, Mrs. Pringle;" and he looked about for a pipe spill.

Mrs. Pringle handed him one with something of a sigh.

"For more than six months," said the captain, meditatively drawing a long breath and carefully using his little finger for a tobacco stopper—"for more than six months I've been laid up in port, so to speak, and yet in sight and smell of the sea."

"Yes, you can certainly smell it," said Mrs. Pringle, dubiously. "And when the fishing boats come in, it's a little bit—eh—strong."

"Well," said the captain, admiringly, "a trifle, maybe, for a delicate lady's nose like yours, Mrs. Pringle; but there's not an unpleasant flavor about it to a man who's spent his life in communion, so to speak, with such smells. Why, every port has a different smell, and you get to know the lay of the land by it long before you drop anchor."

"Aren't you tired of the sight of the sea?" somewhat inconsequently asked Mrs. Pringle, again filling the captain's cup, which was blue and white, with "A Present from Ventnor" on it in bold, clear characters of green. Mrs. Pringle lived about a mile beyond Ventnor, in a snug little cottage, whose garden ran down to the sea.

"No, ma'am. I ain't," returned the captain, meditatively. "'Cause why, Mrs. Pringle? The sea gets into a man's blood and heart and brain. When he goes down to the ships, likewise fishing smacks, it's because he's drawn to it, so to speak. He can't help it. The wonders of the deep are always wonders to him, though he's seen them all his days; the harvest of the sea—its dead men's bones, its coral caves, where, saving your presence, those fish-tailed hussies, the mermaids, sit waiting for you with deceitful murmurings and delusive songs—is afore him ever in the night watches; every wind that blows, every whale that spouts, is known to him almost as well as its Creator."

Mrs. Pringle shuddered. "It's a cruel, treacherous thing," she said—"a cruel, treacherous thing. I sometimes wake at nights and draw the clothes over my head to shut out the noise. It makes me shudder, and yet I can't leave it."

"You're right, Mrs. Pringle," said the captain, drawing his chair a little closer to her—"you're right. It is a cruel, treacherous thing, with its changing winds and hungry, foaming waves, its never-resting, never-ending ebb and flow, its little baby ripples and soft surface a-shining in the sun. And then, when you slide down into it just to feel its soft touch, why, as like as not," continued the captain, rather ashamed of his oratorical flight—"why, as like as not, there's a shark waiting to grab and drag you down to Davy Jones' locker."

Mrs. Pringle looked frightened, so the captain hastened to reassure her. "Its a wonderful place is the sea, Mrs. Pringle, such a lot of spare room in it for rubbish. I should like to take two or three of these contractors who've sent in estimates for Providence cottage and bump 'em down into Port Royal harbor, so that Port Royal Tom could just open his jaws and contract for them. One would think I was going to build a palace instead of a tidy little six-roomed cottage."

"Ah, but the masterful way in which you rule and direct them, Capt. Buddle!" said Mrs. Pringle, admiringly. "You've a natural gift for the ruling of men."

"Maybe," said the captain, pleasantly; "but that's a different thing from the ruling of women, Mrs. Pringle. You can't clinch any little difference of opinion with a handspike when you're arguing with lovely woman. You've got to keep your hand on the helm all the time and not let her know it."

"Yes," rejoined Mrs. Pringle, thoughtfully; "women like a strong, masterful hand that'll guide them; but they won't be driven."

The captain shifted himself in his chair. Suddenly it dawned upon him that the matter might be one capable of personal interpretation. He had never tried his hand in that direction. It seemed to him that the howling wind outside, as it blew among the unfinished rafters of the Providence cottage, was jeering at him for his lack of skill in the direction of the fair sex. He stirred his tea and took another lump of sugar.

And the widow, too, thought of many things in her quiet, gentle way as she sat by her side of the fire. Capt. Buddle, with his wonderful flow of language and quaint descriptive power, had been a great source of comfort to the amiable Mrs. Pringle. And now in a couple of months Providence cottage would be finished and the captain cease to remain her lodger. How kind he had been when that "land-shark" of a coal man tried to cheat her out of a sack of coals! The captain, albeit a man of peace, had knocked the fraudulent coal man into the middle of the cellar, and refused to allow him to depart until he put his head through the circular opening and humbly apologized. It was something to have a great, strong, gentle—the captain was wonderfully gentle to her—sailor about the premises. Ah, well, she would take her nephew Jack and his pretty bride, Polly Humphreys, to live with her until they had saved enough money to buy a house—no thrifty fisherman at Ventnor ever married before he had bought a house—and try to forget the captain's pleasant ways. Then she remembered that Jack was a little uncertain in his temper, and that the captain was, except when justifiably roused by fraudulent coal men, as mild as a lamb.

Suddenly Capt. Buddle rose from his chair and crossed over to Mrs. Pringle's side of the room. "Mrs. Pringle, ma'am," he said—and his flow of language seemed to have returned to him—"Mrs. Pringle, ma'am, what would you think of a man who was safe in port if he ventured out to sea again in a new craft—a craft that might be lopsided and cranky, with shifting ballast, given likewise to shipping bilge water"—there was a touch of real pathos in his voice as he drew this touching picture—"and maybe that wouldn't answer her helm? What would you think of such a man if he was to leave his snug bunk in port and go drifting up and down, a-steerin' all over the points of the compass generally?"

"I should think of him whatever you thought of him, Capt. Buddle," said Mrs. Pringle. "It is not for me to set my opinion against that of a sea-faring gentleman like yourself. But if the man you speak of is the man I take him to be, then—"

"Then what, Mrs. Pringle, ma'am?" eagerly inquired the captain.

"He—he would stop in his bunk in port, as you nautical gentlemen say," returned Mrs. Pringle.

The captain's face glowed with excitement. He took up the plans of Providence cottage to cast them in the fire. Mrs. Pringle gently stayed his hand. "What are you doing?" she asked.

"Mrs. Pringle, ma'am, I'm going to commit these plans to the flames," said the captain, "unless you'll let me give them to Jack and Polly."

"W-what?"

"Yes, Mrs. Pringle, ma'am, I am that lubber," said the captain, with repressed excitement. "Why should I go building a house like Providence cottage, when my Providence is here! This is my port; and if so be you'll allow me to cast anchor and stay here"—

"In command?" queried Mrs. Pringle, scarce knowing what she had said.

The captain took her hand. "No, Mrs. Pringle; but as first officer, with you in command, and Prudence and the cat to swab decks."

"Ye-es," said Mrs. Pringle; and the captain, forgetting the cat, kissed her.

The cat walked out of the room, her tail stiff with indignation.

Outside, the wind howled dismally among the brick work of the partially completed Providence cottage. Ten o'clock struck as the widow brought out her family Bible, and Prudence Pemberton, the maid, sat coyly down on the edge of a chair just inside the parlor door.

The captain opened the Bible reverently. "Now we'll have our sailing orders for to-morrow," he said.

Mrs. Pringle laid aside her knitting, looked at the captain with tearful eyes, and placed his spectacles on the open Bible, thus tacitly taking command of that goodly mariner, Capt. Sol Buddle, who put on the spectacles and somewhat laboriously began to read.—G. D. Burgin, in Chambers' Journal.

PERSONAL AND IMPERSONAL.

—A man was seen loafing about a building that was being painted at Belfast, Maine, recently. When asked if he wanted a job he said that he was only waiting for the men to be paid off, as he wanted to borrow a dollar.—Philadelphia Ledger.

—William D. McCoy, United States Minister to Liberia, who died at Monrovia May 14, was a native of Cambridge City, Ind., and about 40 years of age. He had been a teacher for many years, prior to his appointment, and was one of the most progressive colored men in the country.

—Every spring the emperor of China goes to "the emperor's field," plows a portion of it, sows it with several kinds of seeds and superintends the ceremony while the princes and nine courtiers perform the same act in honor of the god of agriculture. The empress at the same time gives her ladies a lesson in silk culture.

—Mrs. Martha Raymond, colored, who lives near Woodbury, N. J., claims to be 115 years old. She says she was born in Virginia in 1778, and some of the oldest residents of Woodbury admit that she seemed to be a pretty old woman when they were young people. She has been living in that town for about sixty years.

He travels in quest of these with Gambier Fenton, a member of the Royal Geographical society and well known as one of the most expert amateur photographers of animals in the world.

—Judge McKinley, of Duluth, is in a singular position. He is judge of the circuit court, in which his own wife, recently admitted to the bar, will practice. And yet he is probably the only man in the world to-day who can prevent his wife from having the last word or fine her for contempt if she does not stop talking when he tells her to.

—It is related of Edwin Booth that he was at one time able to save the life of Robert Lincoln. Both men were in a railway station, and Mr. Lincoln had inadvertently stepped on a track in front of an approaching engine. Absorbed in thought, he had not noticed the vicinity of the train, and would have been struck down had not Mr. Booth sprung forward, caught him in his arms, and lifted him almost bodily to a place of safety. The engine was so near that it actually grazed Mr. Lincoln's heels.

—Ex-Secretary of the Navy Tracy is quoted as saying, apropos of the disaster to the Victoria, that a line-of-battle ship like her is always exposed to the danger of capsizing, being top heavy. "The Victoria carried a monstrous gun, weighing 110 tons. The largest gun we have weighs only sixty-five tons. This tremendous weight placed the ship at the mercy of the waves as soon as the water began to pour in. This accident only re-enforces what I have repeatedly said in my annual reports, that, however, it may be for England, it is folly for us to keep a large battleship cruising in time of peace."

—Self-interest is not an inevitable quantity in human nature. There is a bluff and hearty old Irishman who keeps a small book store in a New York suburban town, who expresses opinions about the wares that he sells. When a boy inquires for "Daredevil Dick, the Dead Shot," he says: "What! Haven't you any better way to spend your time than in reading trash like that? Here it is. You ought to be ashamed of yourself. Now, don't you read it until you've shown it to your parents." A man who had ordered, through him, a number of works on spiritualism and magic, was greeted, on the delivery of those volumes, with: "Man, man! Time must be heavy on your hands to want to be studying rubbish like that."

UNDERSTOOD THE AUDIENCE

Although They Didn't Applaud Eloise When She Recited.

[DRAMATIS PERSONÆ: ELOISE AND LULU.]

Eloise—I saw you at our fair the other night, Lulu. Don't you think it was rather a nice one for just a few very exclusive girls to get up?

Lulu—Oh, it was too lovely! The proceeds went for charity, didn't they?

Eloise—They were to go that way, but then we lost our object, and it did not seem worth while to hunt around for another when there were so many things we wanted ourselves.

Lulu—Lost your object? How could you do that, dear?

Eloise—Well, you see, when the older ladies in our church sent a box to that missionary in Africa, we girls put in a bonnet for his wife—she has been there an awfully long time without a new one; so hers must be ridiculously old style. And what do you think happened?

Lulu—I simply never can guess.

Eloise—A horrid native ate it up because it had a bird on it.

Lulu—That's what people must expect when they associate with barbarians.

Eloise—Then we thought we'd have a fair and get her something a great deal nicer. We had set our hearts on a grand square piano. But all our fathers, of course, had to start up and say it never could be taken 'way out where these people live. So we just divided the money and bought ourselves each a safety bicycle.

Lulu—That crystal palace made of cotton and powdered glass was quite pretty. But mamma wouldn't let me eat any ices there for fear the glass might have fallen in them.

Eloise—That was the great danger. We found we could only sell them to quite small children.

Lulu—The gypsy tent was nice, too. But I heard it said that the girls ought not to have had auburn hair.

Eloise—My dear, every one must know that auburn hair is the thing now. They surely couldn't expect us to have old-fashioned gypsies.

Lulu—What sweet fancy articles you had for sale. And so useful, too.

Eloise—Yes. Did you see those lovely pink and blue brocaded silk things of mine? I made them for sachets, and then I forgot to put the perfume in, so I just called them gentlemen's neckties. Some stupid people thought they were tea cozies and others were just as sure they were scrap bags.

Lulu—You painted some things, too. I recognized your brush at once.

Eloise—Oh, thank you, dear. You are always so appreciative. Half the persons there could'nt make out the decoration on that awfully expensive royal Worcester vase. They were determined to call my lovely spray of apple blossoms butterflies. And one disgusting man thought it was a marine scene.

Lulu—Men are too crude in their tastes. I never mind what they say.

Eloise—I am glad it is all over. It left me quite ill.

Lulu—The nervous strain was too much for you.

Eloise—No, it was the chicken salad. Of course I felt that I must accept every invitation for the good of the cause, so I ate six suppers.

Lulu—I went away before the entertainment part. What did you recite, Eloise?

Eloise—"How Grandmamma Danced," of course.

Lulu—Why, to be sure. I didn't think about that. All the girls say it so sweetly.

Eloise—Papa says if they once let me begin I never stop until the last person goes home. But I only recited eight times. I don't think that's too many for a whole hour's entertainment, do you? Some of the girls didn't like it; they wanted to show off themselves. You know how determined Dorothy Travers always is to sing? She was simply furious. I have the loveliest new recitation, Lulu. It's awfully pathetic. Thirteen people die in the very first verse.

Lulu—How did it take?

A COURT ROMANCE.

An Incident as a Ball That Caused the Exile of a Magyar Nobleman.

Young Count H——, a Magyar nobleman, lost his heart to his sovereign many years ago. Tall and well made, and with an exceedingly handsome face on his broad shoulders, Count H—— was a young officer in the royal Hungarian body guard. He worshiped the empress with all the ecstacies of a first love, and he was ready to perpetrate the maddest follies in order to win even the faintest smile of recognition. But he had never dared to breathe a word of his feelings to her. One night, however, during a ball at the castle of Shoenbrunn, while wandering by her side on the moonlit terraces, he forgot all else save his uncontrollable passion. It is true that the exquisite loveliness of the young empress was sufficient to set on fire the brain of any man, as she stood there illuminated by the silvery rays of the harvest moon, with her Narcissus-like fairness, her great blue-black eyes looking so abnomally large in her delicate face, and her ethereal form clouded in silk-embroidered, diamond-studded gauze, with huge emeralds glittering on her hair and bosom.

The young officer came nearer to her, and suddenly putting out his arms to clasp her to his heart, murmured words of passionate love. Before, however, he could so much as touch her, she stopped him with a glance so chill and so contemptuous that it seemed to freeze and to magnetize him. He paused a second, trembling from head to foot, then throwing himself wildly at her feet he buried his face in the perfumed laces of her gown and sobbed out his love. Far from arousing a sentiment of pity in her heart, the young man's despair, his words and his kneeling attitude seemed to her intolerable insults. She did not stop to consider the temptation that had been been placed in his way, but drawing aside with a gesture of unutterable disdain, she left him and disappeared into the palace.

Two days later Count H—— was exiled to his great possessions in the far south of Hungary, and during many long and weary years he was kept there by the orders of the kaiser, to whom Empress Elizabeth had related the incident.—Harper's Magazine.

THE MEXICAN WASP.

How the Insect Cured a Very Bad Case of Rheumatism.

"I see they are talking about the virus of a certain Mexican spider being a sure cure or preventive of typhus," said a well known railway passenger agent recently. "Some people may doubt it, but, knowing what I do about the curative properties of another cheerful creature that makes Mexico its home, I'd be willing to back that spider to knock out the typhus or anything else. The insect that doctored me is an interesting specimen of the wasp family. I forget what the Mexican name for it is, but translated it means tarantula hawk, and it is called that because it has a way of swooping down on the tarantula and disposing of it as easily as a chicken hawk can do up a pullet.

"This wasp is the only thing that big hairy spider is afraid of. The tarantula will tackle a rattlesnake or a bear without a moment's hesitation, but it turns tail and digs for home if there is a tarantula hawk buzzing anywhere in its vicinity. The wasp doesn't eat the tarantula. It simply drops down on it and socks its stinger in the spider, whereupon the spider turns up its toes. The wasp lays a couple of eggs in the fleshy part of the tarantula's big body and then buries its victim. The curious part of it is the spider isn't dead. It is only paralyzed or embalmed, so to speak, with all its vital juices intact. The wasp's eggs hatch out grubs in the course of time, and the grubs go right to work dining on the tarantula's preserved meat.

"When they have eaten it all they bore out of the spider's shell, dig their way to the surface, and become wasps themselves, and start out for business on their own account. "This interesting wasp is something like a couple of inches long when it is of age, and has a stinger with close on to an inch of plunge. This stinger is what you might call a nonforfeitable stinger, for it doesn't yield itself up at a single plunge, like a honey bee does its stinger, but is good for an all day's job. The Mexican wasp is the color of a bay horse, and they say down there that it will go ten miles out of its way to sting a man. The natives get fat on centipede stings and scorpion stings, but they will dive for cover when the wasp of that favored clime heaves to. I had the honor, to my everlasting joy, of being tasted once by one of these blessings in disguise. Why to my everlasting joy? I will tell you.

"For fifteen years I had been a big favorite with the rheumatism. It seemed willing, even anxious, to put all it had on me at any time. I had tried pills, and liniments, and batteries, and springs, and every other unfailing remedy for rheumatism, but still it clung to me closer and closer. A couple of years ago a friend of mine told me to go down into Mexico and try the climate there, because, he said, he knew a man who had gone there almost tied in a knot by rheumatism, and he got well.

"So I went down into Mexico, and promptly and steadily got worse every day. I was getting ready to come back home and die, if I could, when one day a Mexican wasp pitying me, I suppose, came along and socked his stinger into me. He sampled me on the cheek, and, although I had been a passenger agent for twenty years, my cheek was feazed by that wasp. At first I felt as if the whole of one side of my head was asleep. I had heard all about the way these wasps treated tarantulas, and I said:

"'Great Scott! Is this wasp going to embalm me, fill me full of eggs, and serve me as free lunch to its incipient progeny?'

"My face kept on getting cold, and I couldn't make it hurt by pinching it or pricking it with a pin. In the horror of what I supposed was my impending fate, I lost all recollection of the rheumatic pains that had been turning me almost inside out only a minute or so before. The cheering numbness and coolness in my face and head didn't last long. They quit as suddenly as they came, and were succeeded by a pang such as I imagine might follow the insertion of a wire into a sensitive part of your body, and then having it gradually heated until it stood at white heat. I clawed my jaw and pulled my hair and pranced around and howled. Five minutes before it was all I could do to hobble around with a cane.

"A sympathetic native told me I would keep on feeling that way for a couple of hours. I did, for nobody would lend me a pistol. I could have laid down and died with willingness, and moaned and moaned when they told me that the sting of the Mexican wasp never killed anybody. The two hours that I kept company with the aftermath of that wasp's plunger were two hours of mortal agony. But the pain went away after that so suddenly that I went to sleep and had delightful dreams. When I awoke I felt like a new man. The cheek hadn't swollen a particle during the entire course of the treatment, but it was as sore as nine boils for two days.

"Now, queer as it may seem, I couldn't imagine what it was about me that felt so new and strange for those two days, and then all of a sudden it hit me that it was because my rheumatism was gone. There was no more sign of rheumatism about me than there is about a kitten. And there never has been from that day to this. I don't care how bad a man has rheumatism, let him go down and take the Mexican wasp-sting treatment, and he'll forget he ever had it. I know what the Mexican wasp can do in rheumatism, and so I am willing to back that Mexican spider at big odds against typhus, and you may tell 'em that I say so."—N. Y. Sun.

—Ambassador Bayard as a foreign journal saw him: "A semi-sparebuilt man, somewhat rounded at the shoulders, with a clean-cut, smooth-shaven face, large gray eyes, and rapidly whitening hair, and has the finest set of teeth and the most winning smile in the diplomatic service. Indeed, his best portraits fail to convey an adequate notion of the grave charm and air of benignant distinction that mark his handsome face. His manner is of the court courtly, dignified and polished, yet graciously genial withal; and in this and other respects he is one of the few creditable specimens still remaining of the scholarly statesmen of the high-bred old school."

—Prof. Virchow, the eminent German scientist, destroys many fairy tales regarding the emperor's health, when he says: "I have not examined him, but I know his trouble is only the perforation of the drum of one ear, which is not dangerous, for I have it myself. He is in excellent vigorous health, and leads a reasonable life."

As the result of my tests, I find the ROYAL BAKING POWDER superior to all the others in every respect. It is entirely free from all adulteration and unwholesome impurity, and in baking it gives off a greater volume of leavening gas than any other powder. It is therefore not only the purest, but also the strongest powder with which I am acquainted.

ART ETCHINGS.

EDWIN A. ABBEY'S frieze in the new Boston public library has for its subject the search for the Holy Grail.

GREEK paintings were executed in distemper with glue, milk or white of eggs and on wood, clay, plaster, stone, parchment and canvas.

A GERMAN artist has finished a painting representing Prince Bismarck and ex-Minister William Walter Phelps discussing the Samoan conference. The work is to be sent to New York for exhibition in due time.

ALMA TADEMA says in the Studio that "the camera has had a most healthful and useful influence on art and is of the greatest use to painters." This high opinion will be of unusual interest to those persons who have contended that photography has done irreparable damage to real art.

Wide Awake.

The August number of this delightful magazine is much larger than usual—containing 150 pages of reading matter. Perhaps the "Story of WIDE AWAKE" may be considered the leading article of the number. It is a graphic account of the magazine, from its very beginning to the present time. A fine frontispiece portrait of the late Daniel Lothrop, the founder of WIDE AWAKE, most fitly opens this farewell number.

Among the more notable stories and articles may be mentioned "A Race for Life," by John Willis Hays, a thrilling Indian tale; "The North Chamber," by Louisa T. Craigin, and "The Thrilling Story of Capt. Noman," by Charles R. Talbot; "Concord Dramatics," by George B. Bartlett, will interest all lovers of Louisa Alcott's "Little Women" stories.

With this great Midsummer issue, WIDE AWAKE ceases to be a separate publication, and bids farewell to its thousands of readers.

This new departure is explained in the article "The Story of WIDE AWAKE." The D. Lothrop Company have made arrangements to merge WIDE AWAKE into St. Nicholas.

The price of this number is 20 cents. For sale at news stands; or mailed by D. Lothrop Company, Boston, on receipt of price.

"I'm better off," buzzed the fly as he tried to break away from the fly paper.—Philadelphia Record.

"THERE'S a roomer in the air," muttered the impecunious seventh-floor lodger, as he slid down the rope that led from his window to the back alley, "that the landlord won't be able to trace, and I'll bet on it!"

"HAVE you any tomarter's?" asked Mrs. Dimling of her grocer. "No, ma'am," replied the latter, "but I have some very nice potarters." "Keep 'em," she rejoined, viciously.—Harper's Bazar.

PREACHER—"I say, Sammie, your mother tells me that she pays you for being good. Do you think that is right?" Sammie—"Of course I do. I don't want to be good for nothing in this world."

—Several of the boys are said to have had a chicken roast on the island near the wagon bridge a few nights ago. It don't seem quite right to make one furnish fowls alone, as is claimed to have been the case there.

—In cleaning the baby buggy a few days ago, a shot was found by Simon Weldele's folks which is supposed to be the one that struck Willie in the eye, as he was in the buggy at the time he was hurt.

—Prof. Ballard, of Minneapolis, is talking of giving a concert here in the near future, consisting of vocal and instrumental music. Prof. Ballard comes higely recommended and brings with him some of the beit talent of Minneapolis, and his concert will undoubtedly be a treat and well deserving of a full house.

—It is kind of amusing to see elderly people congregate about the "merry-go-'round tent and hear their old fashioned excuses. An ex-mayor's wife was seen wheeling her baby in thrt direction. She said, "I will have to go over there to see my little girl and give her a nickel to ride with." A veteran of the late war and a grandpa said "he took a ride along with his daughter to see that she did not fall off." His daughter probably would say she "went with papa to keep him from falling off."

—When on their way home from a party in the country a few nights ago, George Cramer and Frank Swadner, who were driving Joe Cramer's horse and buggy, ran into a pile of farm machinery, plows, etc., etc., near Swodners blacksmith shop, and which it is claimed some funny inclined individuals had piled up in the street, breaking a shaft and single-tree and doing other damage. Ex-Councilman Cramer is talking of putting a bill in to the village council for the damages, as it is the place of the village and night watchman to keep the streets clear. Too many things for safety are allowed on the streets, sidewalks and in the alleys most of the time.

—We received by this mornings mail an interesting communication from a gentleman in Woodland, too late for this week, but will not be apt to spoil before next week.

Will Pagenkoff shot at the fox when in line with Mr. Bowen, the buck shot struck Mr. B's. gun stock and glanced, after breaking the stock striking Mr. B. on the front of the right chest, making quite a bruise. A lucky accident.

—On Saturday evening Simon Weldele's folks came home with little Willie, who was shot in the eye a couple of weeks ago, and who has been at St. Joseph's Hospital, St. Paul, under the care of Dr. Cornelius Williams who hopes to save the eye with some sight. They will return tomorrow to have the Dr. look at the eye.

County Cullings.

Wright dounty politics, apparently very quiet, are sizzling considerably around the corners. Just what will turn up before election has not yet appeared on the surface. We apprehend there will be several surprises.

Dr. Geo. C. Barton, formerly owner and publisher of this paper at Buffalo, now of Minneapolis, is receiving a visit from his brother Joe, who for a short time assisted him in editing a live democratic paper.

Prof. W. F. . Webster, son of W. W. Webster, of Clearwater, an old Wright county boy, has resigned from the superintendency of the Moorhead Public schools, and accepted a more lucative position, nearer home, that of principal of the East Side High school, Minneapolis.

Among post officers appointed during the week past are, in Wright county, M. A. O'Hair, Delano; Martin O'Loughlin, Maple Lake; W. T. Rigby, Clearwater; Chas. H. Callen, Waverly. Among other Minnesota appointments are T. F. O'Hair, Wheaton; Mrs. E. M Goetz, Winsted; Wm. Bushnell, Wayzeta.

This is getting to be a tramp country sure. On Monday night last twenty-seven tramps were found in the town of Big Lake, and they are multiplying like locusts in the days of old. Now if Harrison had been elected, some good democrat would have laid it to the administration. But you see Cleveland is in, and they are not saying a word. —Wright County Times.

Neighbor Buckley's letter from England in last week's Eagle, don't seem to jibe with some of the old birds tariff teachings about we must have a tariff in order to protect ourselves from England's pauper labor. He says in his letter, "I do not see that the majority of things are a bit cheaper than in America and I am more than ever convinced that the United States is the place to live in for the wage earner."

From Larimore.

LARIMORE, N. D. Aug. 2.

The haryest is pretty good here. We arrived here all right. I am at work on the Elk Valley Farm, just south of Larimore City. Two men were injured to-day on the farm. They had a scrap and fell against a plow and got their heads cut. They were Charley Johnson and Charley Anderson. Farmers are all anxious about the crops as now is the time the wheat is filling. It bids fair for ½ to ⅔ crop though the weather continues warm. Send my paper here and oblige, Yours,

PAUL E. DATKO.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

"HUSTLE."

You may tell that story about the hare
And tortoise as often as you will;
I know that the man who "hustles" gets there
Ahead of the one who sits still.

Of course he stumbles who goes too fast,
But I'd rather blunder and fall,
Yet reach the goal somehow at last,
Than never get there at all.

The slow, methodical, cautious man,
Who is always decrying haste,
Who never achieves, but is great to plan—
Well, he isn't the man to my taste.

In watching mankind I have noticed the fact
And I hold a truth indeed,
To be rapid in thought, and steady in act,
Is the very best way to succeed.

But then we are not all built that way,
And the next best thing in life's tussle,
Toward winning the prize is to be, as I say,
The one who is willing to "hustle."

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Pot and Kettle.

I sought the home of Farmer Pott
One sunny atumnn day,
Quite certain of his place was not
So stopped and asked the way.
'Twas Farmer Kettle who replied—
"Jest foller down this line—
The fust house to yer left-hand-side—
His farm jines on to mine.

"Come in an' hev some apples, sir,"
He added kindly, "do,"
To find their likes you'd travel fur—
I think you'll say so too.
An' there's some cider—hev a cup—
Our work to day is play—
We're bar'lin uv our apples up
Agin nex' market day."

I thanked my genial host, partook
Of his delicious fare—
"Is Pot at home?" I asked; he shook
His head with dubious air—
"Can't say, I'm sure—I'm not the man
To know his business—
He'd speak to me no sooner than
I'd speak to him, I guess.

"Indeed!" I said, with some surprise,
"I thought that you were friends!"
'Well, no. we ain't, an' ef I'm wise
We won't be 'till he mends;
He'll do the meanest, littlest things
To make a cent, and yet
He's careful of his own puss-strings
An' keeps 'em drawed tight-shet.

"Las' spring he borry'd uv me grain
Fur seed—he'd none at all—
Agreein' to send back again
The same, ez good, this fall:
It came back one peck short ur more
An' wasn't no ways clean—
I'd cut my right hand off affore
I'd do a thing that mean.

"Well, good day, sir, my lazy boys
Air waitin' to be showed How to pack fruit—just hear their noise!"
And as I reached the road
I heard his voice above the din—
"Say there, you John and Charles,
Put all them kurly apples in
The bottom of the bar'ls."

READ the Present's message on our second page, and see for yourself what he says. Cut it out and carry it with you and when some hot headed politican tries to make you believe that Grover will sit idly by and see the country go to the dogs, take it out and read it to him for the probabilities are he has not read it himself.

THE hotly contested fight between the mayor of Litchfield and the blind-piggies of that town, which had been going on since the spring election, when the people voted against granting license, resulted last week in a surrender of the last man to the mayor. His fines and costs were between $300 and $400, on which he had appealed, but he finally agreed to pay up and leave the town if no more prosecutions were begun. Pluck and earnestness on the part of the mayor won.—Hutchinson Democrat.

THE Pouuliste warehouse, which was to be built at the "Zenith City by the unsalted sea" seems to be likely to succumb to the intricicies of the lawsof the state, and like many another undertaking, fall through with. Henry Reppe, of Fairmount, Martin county, has asked that an injunction be granted restraining the grain and warehouse commifsion from building the elevator as it is not being done in accordance with the laws of Minnesota. Donnelly is a good one for engineering great schemes up to a point where people's admiration is excited as by a bubble, and then like the bubble bursting.

Cleveland's Message.

The message of the President to the special term of congress which assembled on Monday is what was expected. It is a document which shows for itself that Grover understands our situation; that he understands its causes, and that he has a remedy which he recommends to be put in force, forthwith. He claims that the principal fault lies with the purchasing of silver clause, of the John Sherman silver bill, and recommends its speedy repeal. He says: "The people of the United States are entitled to a sound and stable currence and to money recognized as such on every exchange and in every market of the world. Their government has no right to injure them by financial experiments opposed to the policy and practice of the civilized states, nor is it justified in permitting an exaggerated and unreasonable reliance on our national strength and ability to jeapardize the people's money. This matter rises above the plane of party politics." This message has the right ring to it. He does not propose to experiment at the expense of the poorer classes in our land, but get back to good old Jefferson doctrines. To doctrines that all men are created equal, and are entitled to equality, before the laws of our land and to good sound money that will buy what it is made for, without people becoming so distrustful as they have for the past few weeks. Minnesota Congressmen and Senators are represented as approving the message very warmly. It is to be hoped that Congress will at once take action on it and relieve the financial pressure.

The Regular Drinker.

The regular drinker is known by the blossom on his nose. By his whiskey cough. By his nervous habits, about drinking time. He may drink once a day at first but gradually takes more until he has many glasses before night. He establishes a time when he must have a drink to wash down his supper, or after breakfast before he starts on his journey. He adheres firmly to his purpose for a long time to take one drink a day "for the stomach's sake," but after a while concludes one in the morning and one in the evening is about the right thing. This hankering for more grows until among the earliest steps that patter over the sidewalk every morning you can detect the familiar foot fall of those who go to seek mixed wines, and after you are nicely ensconsed in your virtuous couch at night the last sound that falls on your ear to be remembered in the morning is the heavy tread, often unsteady tread, of the regular drinker, who has risen early hastened for an "eye opener," had his breakfast and taken "another" to keep it down. One before dinner and another after, and perhaps met some friends in a saloon and had a few extra, then taken his "night-cap" and dragged his weary way home. He gets up in the morning wishes he "hadn't been out so late," but hastens to get an "eye opener" instead of keeping away from what is surely ruining his business chances in the world. As everybody is beginning to shun drinking men; drunken engineers, conductors, or brakesmen cannot hold positions long, much less be elected to higher places. Careful merchants enquire when taking onto their books a new customer. "Does he drink?" If so they are very shy of him, not but he is honest, or intends to be, but that he is apt to pay out his hard earned money for drink and have nothing for other purposes, and neglect his business. Insurance companies will prefer not to take a risk when the applicant is at all edicted to drink and especially if he drinks regularly before breakfast, they have learned by dear experience, that such men do not live nearly as long as men who do not drink, and will accept them but for a limited number of years, at a high rate, and not as they would be glad to do had they the assurance that no liquor would be used. Things go on, the regular drinker who tells you "I can drink when I please and let it alone when I please. I am a man I am" learns these things for himself, he looses his job, he looses his customers, his business goes from him, he knows better than anyone can tell him, why, but instead of slacking up, he increases the number of drinks per day, and the rate of speed when he will be a bankrupt, his famly destitute, his home in the hands of his creditors, and himself a helpless and hopeless old drunkard who cannot earn his own living. How many men there are in every community who are good, reliable, upright, honest citizens, but for drink, how often we hear of some of them. "He is a good merchant but for whiskey." He would be a shinning light in his profession if he would quit drinking." He would be the wealthiest farmer in the neighborhood if he would not come to town too often for "his beer." It is unnecessary longer to phylosophize on the subject. Those who use the beverages too freely know better than we can depict to them all the evils that follow in the wake of drinking regularly. Think it over men. Don't say that that hits Tom, Dick or Harry, but if you ever feel like "taking something" just think "three times before you drink."

The Great Question.

EDITOR GAZETTE:—On the evening of the convening of Congress in special session, the question that naturally presents itself to the mind of the patriotic citizen is: What ought they to do in regard to the financial situation?

An edict has gone forth from Wall street to repeal the Sherman silver law, or at least that part of it relating to the monthly purchase of 4,500,000 ozs. of silver, and the issuance of silver certificates to pay for same, and the subservient tools of plutocracy will probably do it.

Wall Street, in its circulars, has sent forth a wail from "Dan unto Beersheba," that the silver dollar is really worth but 53 cents, and is the cause of all the present difficulty, and the blind votaries of monometalism take up the cry and preach it from the street corner, the rostrum, and through the press. Then these same monometallists will turn round and accept the silver dollar as quickly as they will the gold dollar. But the American people delight in being humbugged, and such inconsistencies are pre-eminently American.

While the plutocrats have sent out circular after circular teeming with sophisms against silver, they have failed as yet, to prove that silver has had anything to do with the panicky feeling in business circles; and the cry of intrinsic values being an essential element of sound money, is nothing more nor less than an egregious, palpable falshood.

Money is not property. It is simply a medium of exchange, and the claim that a medium of exchange must have an intrinsic value equal to its face is diametrically opposed to the opinions of all the world's greatest financiers, and of the Supreme Court.

The money power has surruptitiously succeeded effecting the demonetization of silver in India, a country that has used silver successfully for 5,000 years, and has put in force an act very like the Sherman law, and yet they tell us even under this law the condition of the country is improving, and in the same breath that the same kind of a law is ruining America.

While no good reason has, as yet, been given for the demonetization, we presume it was on account of India's enormous (?) circulation, about $4 per capita. This act has made almost absolute slaves of 250 millions of people, and Shylock is their taskmaster.

As has been stated, no money can be absolutely sound, that is, not a full legal tender, and history has yet to furnish an instance where a legal tender silver dollar has not kept at par with, or at times even a premium above, the gold dollar. This great financial stringency is naught but the result of a gigantic conspiracy on the part of the money power to place the whole civilized world on an absolute gold basis, and they evidently believe the common people verdant enough to allow them to do so. If our Congressmen care anything for the interests of their constituents, and the Sherman law is repealed, they will pass in lieu thereof an unlimited free coinage bill.

Again they will tell us that we are suffering from an over-abundance of money rather than a lack of it; and then these hypocritical Judases turn round and issue 23 millions of Clearing-house certificates to inflate the currency, when they themselves happen to get pinched a trifle. Delve down into your pockets and ascertain if you have an over-supply of ducats. If any of our goldite friends have a goodly supply of "worthless silver dollars on hand, we know of an association that will purchase them at 90 per cent. of their face value, which is 30 cents more (?) than they are really worth, you know.

A nation that is obliged to borrow 500 million dollars annually, of Lombard street, to move the crops, is surely not suffering from a surfeit of the circulating medium.

What Congress needs to do now to relieve the financial strain is: First, to pass a free coinage bill; secondly, to issue full legal tender notes (based on the wealth of the nation) in limited amounts, but sufficient to increase the circulation to at least forty dollars per capita; thirdly, to abrogate the National Bank act, and all other acts that tend to place the financial system in the hands of private corporations.

It is impossible for anyone to analyze the financial problem in the confines of a single newspaper article; but let every citizen take up the study of conditions that environ him; let him look at things from a non-partizan standpoint; let him study out methods and principles by which the ship of state may be guided into smooth waters, and kept from stranding on the numerous rocks towards which ignorance always leads.

Seen in the Cities.

On Saturday last we had business in the cities and while there took occasion to look around what we could. We landed in St. Paul about 7:30, a. m. Many of the citizens were still in bed, but we secured a breakfast and sallied forth to see. All was life, and motion. People were going to their places of business; We were particularly amused by a scene in front of a prominent real estate office where three old men, some of whom reminded us of the old gentlemen in "Pink Dominoe," were making frantic but vain efforts to secure an entrance to the office; Something appeared to be the matter with the lock, as each tried, the other who "knew how" would take his turn with a latch key. Some large buildings are going up. Work on the streets is in progress, and things appear to be moving about as usual, notwithstanding the stories being circulated that a prominent M. D. who happened to have $78,000.00 in the bank! went round and called for it and was given the amount in silver, making over 500 pounds, and requiring the aid of a horse and wagon to take it away. And of a Minneapolis man who came down and drew out his $5,000.00 deposit, filling his pockets so full that he had to go through the streets presenting the appearance of a stuffed toad. The familiar countenance of that chief of newspaper men, H. C. Hall, was recognized on the street, treading the paths so long used to him but for a season, which he had forsaken. We saw an electric car near the post office on fire, but which was saved by the timely arrival of water.

In the afternoon we arrived at Minneapoli, left the electric car at Seventh streeet south and walked to the court house, where things appeared to be suspended for Saturday afternoon holiday. Journeying along on foot towards Nicollet avenue, we observed that the new court house is rapidly drawing near completion, that is the southern portion of it, and is a very fine edifice. It is to be hoped that ere long people will not have to go so dangerously near jail to see Judges Russell or Canty in their offices. The new Olson block is being rapidly pushed and will doubtless soon be filled with goods. On the way down we noticed a cool looking little shop near the new court house which appeared to be having a resting day with but a single young man for an occupant, who was reading Longfellow's poems, we dropped in to enjoy a few minutes rest, and found the shop to be engaged in the manufacture of ornamental work for the new bank buildings; noticing however several pieces in rough, and some completed, of superior workmanship, we were led to enquire concerning them, and soon unfolded the fact that this was the place where one of the foremost artists of the day spends a part of his time. We were shown a beautiful tomb stone on which was the faces of a young man and an elderly lady, about life size, that of the woman over lapping the other, allowing but the front half of the young man's head to be seen while the entire head of the woman was plain. We were told that this was the dead mother and brother of the artist who made it, and that it was nothing more nor less than a work of love, a tribute of respect for his dead friends, of him who so successfully competed for the chance to make the Minnesota monument at Gettysburg. That the grand work of art and skill was the product of the man who has already become known, on both sides the great Atlantic waters. That we were actually in the den of B. J. Fjelde, the young sculptor. Mr. Fjelde will, we are informed, soon sail for his native land, Norway.

THERE appears to be no way of determining absolutely whether women should or should not wear corsets. THIS has not been a good year for the bee keepers, and there has not been half a crop of honey. There is a great difference in seasons, so far as honey making is concerned. Though flowers come in about the same profusion each year, they do not contain the same amount of honey. Some years they seem filled with sweet nectar, and the bees make frequent excursions, and always return heavily laden, and other years the busy little workers scour the country far and wide and gather little honey. It has been two or three years since there was a large crop of the product.

THE drop in silver has stirred up the western miners to a more vigorous search for gold, and it is probable that the production of that metal will be greatly increased within a year or two. Mines which have not paid will be reopened, and with new processes for the reduction of the ores, the work will doubtless be prosecuted with profit. Prospectors are now scattered over the mountains of Montana, and while their individual findings may be small the aggregate will make a large increase in the total of a year's production. Still it will be a long time before gold will be too plentiful.

"THE parents of to-day," says Mrs. Burton Harrison in her story, 'Out of Season,' "don't trouble themselves to train up wives for the rank and file of our honest gentlemen. Until women know their business the divorce mill is bound to be in active operation. There is a thought here which intelligent American women should be quick to "catch on." THE MESSAGE.

President Cleveland Discusses the Financial Problem.

Attributes Panic to Congressional Silver Legislation—Recommends Repeal of Purchasing Clause.

THE PRESIDENT'S VIEWS.

TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES:

The existence of an alarming and extraordinary business situation, involving the welfare and prosperity of all our people, has constrained me to call together in extra session the people's representatives in congress, to the end that, through a wise and patriotic exercise of the legislative duty with which they solely are charged, present evils may be mitigated and dangers threatening the future may be averted.

The Unfortunate Financial Plight.

Our unfortunate financial plight is not the result of untoward events nor of conditions related to our natural resources; nor is it traceable to any of the afflictions which frequently check national growth and prosperity. With plenteous crops, with abundant promise of remunerative production and manufacture, with unusual invitation to safe investment and with satisfactory assurance to business enterprise, suddenly financial distrust and fear have sprung up on every side. Numerous moneyed institutions have suspended because abundant assets were not immediately available to meet the demands of frightened depositors. Surviving corporations and individuals are content to keep in hand the money they are usually anxious to loan, and those engaged in legitimate business are surprised to find that the securities they offer for loans, though heretofore satisfactory, are no longer accepted. Values supposed to be fixed are fast becoming conjectural, and loss and failure have invaded every branch of business.

Attributed to Congressional Legislation.

I believe these things are principally chargeable to congressional legislation touching the purchase and coinage of silver by the general government. This legislation is embodied in a statute passed on the 14th day of July, 1890, which was the culmination of much agitation on the subject involved, and which may be considered a truce, after a long struggle, between the advocates of free silver coinage and those intending to be more conservative.

Silver Depreciation.

Undoubtedly the monthly purchases by the government of 4,500,000 ounces of silver, enforced under that statute, were regarded by those interested in silver production as a certain guaranty of its increase in price. The result, however, has been entirely different, for, immediately following a spasmodic and slight rise, the price of silver began to fall after the passage of the act and has since reached the lowest point ever known. This disappointing result has led to renewed and persistent effort in the direction of free silver coinage.

Future Results.

Meanwhile, not only are the evil effects of the operation of the present law constantly accumulating, but the result to which its execution must inevitably lead is becoming palpable to all who give the least heed to financial subjects. This law provides that in payment for the 4,500,000 ounces of silver bullion, which the secretary of the treasury is commanded to purchase monthly, there shall be issued treasury notes redeemable on demand in gold or silver coin, at the discretion of the secretary of the treasury, and that said notes may be reissued.

Parity Between Gold and Silver.

It is, however, declared in the act to be "the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other upon the present legal ratio, or such ratio as may be provided by law." This declaration so controls the action of the secretary of the treasury as to prevent his exercising the discretion nominally vested in him, if by such action the parity between gold and silver may be disturbed. Manifestly a refusal by the secretary to pay these treasury notes in gold, if demanded, would necessarily result in their discredit and depreciation as obligations payable only in silver, and would destroy the parity between the two metals by establishing a discrimination in favor of gold.

Redemption in Gold.

Up to the fifteenth day of July, 1893, these notes had been issued in payment of silver bullion purchases, to the amount of more than one hundred and forty-seven millions of dollars. While all but a very small quantity of this bullion remains uncoined and without usefulness in the treasury, many of the notes given in its purchase have been paid in gold. This is illustrated by the statement that between the first day of May, 1892, and the fifteenth day of July, 1893, the notes of this kind issued in payment for silver bullion, amounted to a little more than fifty-four millions of dollars, and that during the same period about forty-nine millions of dollars were paid by the treasury in gold for the redemption of such notes.

Gold Depletion.

The policy necessarily adopted of paying these notes in gold has not spared the gold reserve of $100,000,000 long ago set aside by the government for the redemption of other notes, for this fund has already been subjected to the payment of new obligations amounting to about $150,000,000 on account of silver purchases, and has, as a consequence, for the first time since its creation been encroached upon.

We have thus made the depletion of our gold easy and have tempted other and more appreciative nations to add it to their stock. That the opportunity we have offered has not been neglected is shown by the large amounts of gold which have been recently drawn from our treasury and exported to increase the financial strength of foreign nations. The excess of exports of gold over its imports for the year ending June 30, 1893, amounted to more than $87,500,000.

Between the 1st day of July, 1890, and the 15th day of July, 1893, the gold coin and bullion in our treasury decreased more than $130,000,000, while during the same period the silver coin and bullion in the treasury increased more than $147,000,000. Unless government bonds are to be constantly issued and sold to replenish our exhausted gold, only to be again exhausted, it is apparent that the operation of the silver purchase law now in force leads in the direction of the entire substitution of silver for the gold in the government treasury, and that this must be followed by the payment of all government obligations in depreciated silver.

Must Part Company.

At this stage gold and silver must part company and the government must fail in its established policy to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other. Given over to the exclusive use of a currency greatly depreciated according to the standard of the commercial world, we could no longer claim a place among nations of the first class, nor could our government claim a performance of its obligation, so far as such an obligation has been imposed upon it, to provide for the use of the people the best and safest money.

The Fiat Question.

If, as many of its friends claim, silver ought to occupy a larger place in our currency and the currency of the world through general international cooperation and agreement, it is obvious that the United States will not be in a position to gain a hearing in favor of such an arrangement so long as we are willing to continue our attempt to accomplish the result single handed. The knowledge in business circles among our own people that our government cannot make its fiat equivalent to intrinsic value, nor keep inferior money on a parity with superior money by its own independent efforts, has resulted in such a lack of confidence at home in the stability of currency values that capital refuses its aid to new enterprises, while millions are actually withdrawn from the channels of trade and commerce to become idle and unproductive in the hands of timid owners. Foreign investors, equally alert, not only decline to purchase American securities, but make haste to sacrifice those which they already have.

A Menace Not to Be Disregarded.

It does not meet the situation to say that apprehension in regard to the future of our finances is groundless and that there is no reason for lack of confidence in the purposes or power of the government in the premises. The very existence of this apprehension and lack of confidence, however caused, is a menace which ought not for a moment to be disregarded. Possibly, if the undertaking we have in hand were the maintenance of a specific known quantity of silver at a parity with gold, our ability to do so might be estimated and gauged, and perhaps, in view of our unparalleled growth and resources, might be favorably passed upon. But when our avowed endeavor is to maintain such parity in regard to an amount of silver increasing at the rate of $50,000,000 yearly, with no fixed termination to such increase, it can hardly be said that a problem is presented whose solution is free from doubt.

A Sound and Stable Currency.

The people of the United States are entitled to a sound and stable currency and to money recognized as such on every exchange and in every market of the world. Their government has no right to injure them by financial experiments opposed to the policy and practice of other civilized states, nor is it justified in permitting an exaggerated and unreasonable reliance on our national strength and ability to jeopardize the soundness of the people's money.

Above Party Politics.

This matter rises above the plane of party politics. It vitally concerns every business and calling and enters every household in the land. There is one important aspect of the subject which especially should never be overlooked. At times like the present, when the evils of unsound finance threaten us, the speculator may anticipate a harvest gathered from the misfortune of others, the capitalist may protect himself by hoarding or may even find profit in the fluctuation of values; but the wage-earner—the first to be injured by a depreciated currency and to receive the benefit of its correction—is practically defenseless. He relies for work upon the ventures of confident and contented capital. This failing him, his condition is without alleviation, for he can neither prey on the misfortunes of others, nor hoard his labor.

The Greatest Sufferer.

One of the greatest statesmen our country has known, speaking more than fifty years ago when a derangement of the currency had caused commercial distress, said: "The very man of all others who has the deepest interest in a sound currency, and who suffers most by mischievous legislation in money matters, is the man who earns his daily bread by his daily toil." These words are as pertinent now as on the day they were uttered, and ought to impressively remind us that a failure in the discharge of our duty at this time must especially injure those of our countrymen who labor, and who because of their number and condition are entitled to the most watchful care of their government.

Importance of Immediate Relief.

It is of the utmost importance that such relief as congress can afford in the existing situation be afforded at once. The maxim: "He gives twice who gives quickly," is directly applicable. It may be true that the embarrassments from which the business of the country is suffering arise as much from evils apprehended as from those actually existing. We may hope, too, that calm counsels will prevail and that neither the capitalists nor the wage-earners will give way to unreasoning panic and sacrifice their property or their interest under the influence of exaggerated fears. Nevertheless, every day's delay in removing one of the plain and principal causes of the present state of things enlarges the mischief already done and increases the responsibility of the government for its existence. Whatever else the people have a right to expect from congress they may certainly demand that legislation condemned by the ordeal of three years' disastrous experience shall be removed from the statute books as soon as their representatives can legitimately deal with it.

Tariff Reform in the Near Future.

It was my purpose to summon congress in special session early in the coming September that we might enter promptly upon the work of tariff reform, which the true interests of the country clearly demand, which so large a majority of the people, as shown by their suffrages, desire and expect, and to the accomplishment of which every effort of the present administration is pledged. But while tariff reform has lost nothing of its immediate and permanent importance, and must in the near future engage the attention of congress, it has seemed to me that the financial condition of the country should at once, and before all other subjects, be considered by your honorable body.

Prompt Repeal Recommended.

I earnestly recommend the prompt repeal of the provisions of the act passed July 14, 1890, authorizing the purchase of silver bullion, and that other legislative action may put beyond all doubt or mistake the intention and ability of the government to fulfill its pecuniary obligations in money universally recognized by all civilized countries. (Signed) GROVER CLEVELAND.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Commendable.

The Stock Growers' Journal, Miles City, Mont., in a recent issue says: "The old saying that corporations are bodies without souls seems to be away off at times. Mrs. George Blanck, of Miles City, has recently received the sum of $500 from the Burlington road. It will be remembered that her husband was killed last fall when going east in charge of cattle for the Phillips company. President Scott, of the Stock growers' association, and H. R. Phillips investigated the circumstances attending the death of Mr. Blanck and found the railroad company was not liable, as there was contributory negligence on the part of the deceased. However, in consideration of Mrs. Blanck's straightened circumstances, the Burlington, while recognizing no liability, gave her, through charitable motives solely, the above mentioned sum. Such benevolence deserves to be chronicled, and it should incite other corporations to like deeds of benevolence."

Runaways.

Andrew Schlosser, of Bell River, Douglas county, was thrown from his wagon in Alexandria and may die of his injuries. His team became frightened at the band of a small circus showing there and started to run. Schlosser and his wife were thrown out, one wheel running over Schlosser's ribs. He was picked up for dead, but was revived by the application of electricity. A team belonging to James Heible, of Lake Mary, was also frightened and ran away. Heible's little 6-year-old daughter was alone in the buggy and hung on to the lines. She was thrown out of the buggy about three miles out and only slightly bruised.

He Didn't Get the Cash.

An unknown, tough-looking individual walked into the St. Louis County bank at Duluth and, presenting a revolver to Cashier Britts, demanded the cash of the institution. Instead of giving up the cash, the cashier gave a terrific yell of "police," followed by sundry other yells. Either the bank robber was nervous or thought the chances too great, for he went out of the door like a shot. He leaped upon a horse he had left in front of the bank and fled eastward on the boulevard. The police got after him at once with horses. At a point near Fifteenth avenue east his horse gave out and he took to the woods.

Robbed by Tramps.

While Fred L. Bonker, of Harvey, Ill., and three companions were walking on the railroad track in the east part of Moorhead, they were set upon by six tramps, beaten and robbed. Bonker was shot over the left eye, cut on the top and side of his head and relieved of $50. He was on his way to his brother at Red Lake Falls. His companions were not pounded. The instrument used was a piece of rubber and a half-inch hose two feet long, in the end of which was a piece of iron pipe four inches long. The footpads succeeded in getting away.

The State Elevator.

The railroad and warehouse commission opened the bids on the new state elevator. The bids are as follows: Butler Bros., St. Paul, $209,000; Hendenrich & Co., Chicago, $242,000; Metcalf, McDonald & Co., Chicago, $239,000; J. T. Boulton & Son, Chicago, $237,000; Barnett-Record company, Minneapolis, $229,500; T. H. O'Neill, St. Louis, $198,700; Houston Bros., $238,000. The contract will be let soon.

News in Brief.

The elevator of Wells, Pearce & Co., at Morris, was burned to the ground. It is supposed to have been set on fire by tramps.

The police of St. Paul recently made a raid on the sporting element and captured a number who were enjoying a cock fight in the city limits on the Hudson road.

Thomas Fenrey, a money loaner of Rochester, was waylaid by Ole Nopson of Rockdale and had his skull crushed in by an iron bar. Nopson was arrested.

Seventy-five chronic patients have been transferred from the Rochester hospital to Fergus Falls. Both hospitals are now full.

The trouble threatened on the Mesabi range by strikers has been avoided by the workmen receiving part of their pay.

Charles Allen fruitlessly burglarized the Plymouth clothing store in Minneapolis. He opened the skylight and dropped in noiselessly, as he supposed, but set off the burglar alarm in his entrance. In five minutes the store was surrounded by police. Allen retained his nerve and hid under a pile of overcoats, lying at full length on a table. He was so well concealed that the police failed to discover him. About daylight he went out the same way he came, but the burglar alarm again gave him away and the officers caught him.

C. Bridgeman's saw mill at St. Cloud was burned. Loss, $20,000, with no insurance.

WEST VIRGINIA WONDERS.

A Natural Looped Brook and Two Creeks Running Parallel.

A gentleman who has been traveling in West Virginia hunting timber land for a syndicate of furniture manufacturers claims to have found some very strange freaks of nature in the solitudes he recently visited. Never before were they seen by the eyes of one from the great outer world, and consequently they were never brought to the notice of the public; for the natives of those wilds, accustomed to the romantic beauty and the silent grandeur of nature from its earliest infancy, can see nothing more extraordinary in these landscapes than the bootblack sees in the street where he daily plies his trade. Among the many wonderful things this gentleman described was a small stream which, like a famous railroad loop in the Rocky mountains, makes a circle and crosses itself again. This is probably the only instance of the kind in the world and has never been described before in type. It is a small stream in McDowell county near the town of Vivian. The brook takes its course down a most beautiful though rather narrow valley or ravine amidst scenery mountainous in its nature. At one place its bed is quite narrow and here is where it crosses itself. After passing this point it turns sharply to the left and again to the right and, after making a circle of about a half mile, it passes under itself some ten feet lower than the former surface of the water. This leaves a natural aqueduct. The rocks forming this are of very peculiar construction, arousing astonishment and admiration in all who see it.

There is another curiosty in the same section of the state which will probably be utilized by the company of Cincinnati furniture manufacturers whose representatives discovered it. There are two streams in this instance called Dry and Jacobs forks, respectively. Their heads are widely separated, but ultimately their waters come together. Before their injunction, however, they flow for some distance close together, only a narrow hedge of rocks dividing them. Dry Fork is eight or ten feet higher than Jacobs at the lowest place, and all that is necessary to secure a magnificent water power is to cut through this hedge and let the water of Dry Fork into the other stream. This is probably the only case in the country, perhaps in the world, where a mill on one stream is run by the water from another.—Pittsburgh Press.

SWEET AND TWENTY.

Sweet and twenty, and fair as the day;
Plenty of lovers are bound this way.

Sweet and twenty, with eyes that shine,
And lissome curves that are rare and fine.

Dimples that play at hide-and-seek
On the tender mouth and the rounded cheek.

Never had maiden a lily-white hand
Softer and queenlier to command.

Never had maiden a foot more light
To dance a measure at morn or night.

Sweet and twenty can row and ride,
Over the rippling wavelets glide;

Harness and drive and climb and fish!
Make you many a dainty dish;

Talk in English and French and German,
Which the sweetest, you'll not determine.

Sweet and twenty has life before her,
And all who meet will of course adore her.

But what shall come to her after all—
Queen to reign, or to serve, a thrall?

Only the stars above can tell,
Dumb stars that hide their secrets well.

—Harper's Bazar.

SHE WAS HIS MODEL.

But Her Picture Was Called "The Artist's Wife."

"Now," said Richard Lacy, with a sigh which denoted intense joy, "my chance has come at last!"

An old friend of his, who had made great fame and some money as a novelist, Edmund Shelton, to wit, had selected him to illustrate an edition de luxe of his famous novel, "Claire Ingelow," which you have no doubt read, and had offered very liberal terms.

Here was the opportunity for which Richard Lacy had been waiting ever since he came to London, a youth of seventeen, more than ten years ago.

He was a struggling artist, who painted pictures (which never sold) in the daytime, and earned his bread and cheese at night by designing for the stationery trade, and such black-and-white work as he could get hold of.

He managed to make about six hundred dollars a year, one-third of which went for the rent of the gaunt, bare studio in which he worked, and the little bedroom attached in which he slept. The purchase of materials exhausted another third, and on the remaining two hundred dollars he lived, but did not grow fat.

Unless he could in some way arrest the attention of the public he would probably remain all his life an ill-paid designer.

True, by some freak of fortune, one of his pictures had once been exhibited at the Royal academy. But it had been "skied," not a single critic noticed it, and it was reproduced in none of the illustrated catalogues. Even now he was in debt for its very gorgeous frame.

A timid rat-tat at the door interrupted his soliloquy. "Come in."

A tall young girl stood before him. She was not exactly beautiful, but with an artist's instinct he at once noticed the fine poise of her head and her shapely hand. She was meanly dressed, and she hesitated.

"Good morning," he said, at length. "Model?"

She nodded gravely and handed him a card. "Mary Blackwood" was the name it bore.

Evidently she was a beginner at the business. The old hands never called on him, for they knew his means would not allow him to engage a model, except very occasionally.

"Well, I may be wanting a model shortly," Lacy said; "may I ask what your terms are?"

She stated them. They were ridiculously low.

"Perhaps you can call to-morrow, and I could then say whether you would be likely to suit me."

When Richard Lacy had had three sittings with Mary Blackwood he began to wonder how in the world he would have got on without her.

Not only had she read "Claire Ingelow," but she seemed thoroughly to understand the somewhat difficult character of Claire. She was ever ready with useful suggestions. He admitted to himself that she really inspired his pencil.

He looked forward with eagerness to her visits. Not that they were particularly lively affairs. Miss Blackwood spoke only as occasion demanded, and Lacy was not one of those artists who can talk and work simultaneously.

One day when she came he was almost prostrated by a more than usually severe headache, a complaint from which he frequently suffered. In the middle of the morning's work she suddenly jumped up.

"Why, Mr. Lacy, you are ill," she cried.

"Only one of my headaches," he said, faintly and wearily. "You know, I often have them. But I think I will sit down a bit—"

Then he fainted.

When he recovered consciousness he found himself lying on the only couch which the studio boasted, while Mary Blackwood stood over him with a bottle of smelling salts.

"Where do you keep the tea?" she asked, with a smile. "I must make a cup at once."

Years afterwards he remembered the quiet joy with which he watched her quick, graceful movements as she set about preparing that tea.

"By the way," Lacy said, as he contentedly sipped the tea, "how came I on this couch?"

"I carried you there," said Mary, with a suspicion of red in her cheeks.

"Oh—er—I see!"

"I nursed my mother for three years before she died, and I know what to do; and—you aren't very heavy."

From that time they were no longer artist and model, but close friends. Richard suddenly discovered that it was necessary for Mary to sit four times a week instead of three.

Then he said he would like to paint her portrait as "Clare Ingelow" for the academy, which would open in a couple of months.

It was about this time that Richard found that he could talk and work as well. They discussed everything; and the man discovered to his surprise that in all domains of knowledge outside art, the woman was his equal.

It was remarkable that their discussions never ended with the sittings. Richard said that perhaps if he took more exercise he might have less headache, and so he fell into the habit of escorting her to her rooms. And even at her door he remembered many things that he wanted to say.

During one of these walks Mary remarked that the portrait was nearly completed.

"Of course you will call it 'Claire Ingelow'?" she said.

"Yes, I suppose I must," was the reply, "but I could suggest at least two better titles."

"Indeed! And may I ask what they are?"

"Well, one is 'The dearest girl in the world,' and the other, 'Portrait of the artist's wife.'"

She was silent. It was dark, and the road was deserted. His arm crept round her waist. She looked up, and her lips met his, descending to meet them.

And so it was arranged.

The picture, being at last finished, was dispatched with much trembling. Richard said it ought to be accepted, the subject was so fine. Mary said it ought to be accepted, the handling was so masterly. They were both right.

The eagerly expected and much-prized vanishing ticket duly arrived, but attacks of headache had lately become more frequent and more severe, and on the eventful day he was incapable of movement.

The doctor cross-examined him closely and then said: "I think your best course is to consult an oculist."

"I can see perfectly well," Lacy said, with some astonishment.

"I know you can now," the doctor answered; "but I feel convinced that your headaches proceed from weakness of the eyes."

Richard's brow became clammy. He said nothing about it to Mary and went privily to a great specialist in Harley street.

"You must have absolute rest for two or three years," said the great man.

"But I can't—I must live!"

"If you don't rest you will be blind before you are thirty-five."

With great difficulty he gathered sufficient courage to tell Mary. She remained silent a little.

"Then, of course, you must give your poor eyes a rest, dear," she said.

"But how?"

"Well, you will have the money for the 'Claire Ingelow' drawings, and perhaps the picture will sell. Some one is sure to buy it."

"The money for the drawings won't last six months, and pictures by unknown artists never sell."

"Well, I can earn a little."

She was determined to keep cheerful for his sake. He closed her mouth with a kiss.

"No!" he said, "I shall give myself six months' holiday: that is all I can afford. And then I must begin again and take my chance. Perhaps the doctors are mistaken. They often are."

"Yes, very often," echoed Mary.

It was the day of the private view, and Lacy sat in his studio wondering if any among the brilliant crowd at Burlington house had cast a passing glance at his picture. Toward dusk a telegram came, reply paid.

"What is name and address," it ran, "of lady who sat for Claire Ingelow? Mark Ffolliott, Bedford row."

Now, every one knew Mark Ffolliott. He was the solicitor, and acted for half the aristocracy. What could it mean?

Lacy telegraphed back the required information. He went to see Mary next morning.

"Richard, dear," she began almost immediately, "I know I am a brazen minx, but I think we ought to get married at once. Then I can keep an eye on you to see that you don't work."

"Don't joke, old girl!" he said, with a tremor in his voice. "I've been thinking, and I've made up my mind that I ought to release you, as there is no prospect now of my being able to keep even myself, to say nothing of a family."

"What if I refused to be released?"

"I must insist on it."

"Then I shall sue you for damages for breach of promise."

Mary went softly up to him.

Then she showed him a letter which she had that morning received from Mr. Mark Ffolliott, of Bedford row.

It set forth, with the usual legal formality of phrase, how the writer, catching sight of Mr. Lacy's picture at the academy, had been astonished at the likeness which it bore to a Miss Norris, who, twenty years since, had several times visited his office in company with her uncle, Sir James Norris, who was an old client of his; that Sir James Norris had died about a year ago, intestate; that it had been discovered that the deceased left no relations except his niece, and that the latter had married a gentleman named Blackwood and subsequently died, leaving a daughter; that Mr. Ffolliott had hitherto been unable to trace the issue of this marriage; and, finally, that he was convinced that the original of "Claire Ingelow" must be the daughter of Mrs. Blackwood and heiress to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars and a country house.

"Mary," Richard said, "accept my congratulations! But, of course, a girl with one hundred and fifty thousand dollars and an ancestral hall won't throw herself away on a penniless artist."

"Won't she?" was the reply.

Richard Lacy puts A. R. A. after his name now and paints portraits for five thousand dollars apiece. But Mary always tells the children that the best portrait their father ever did was that of "Claire Ingelow."—Boston Globe.

Mind Your Own Business.

An old custom once prevailed in a remote place of giving a clock to anyone who would truthfully swear that he had minded his own business alone for a year and a day and had not meddled with his neighbors. Many came, but few, if any, gained the prize, which was more difficult to win than the Dunmow flitch of bacon. Though they swore on the four Gospels, and held out their hands in certain hope, some hitch was sure to be found somewhere; and for all their assertions the clock remained stationary on its shelf, no one being able to prove his absolute immunity from uncalled-for interference in things not in any way concerning himself. At last a young man came with a perfectly clean record, and the clock seemed as if it was at last about to change owners. Then said the custodian: "O, a young man was here yesterday, and made mighty sure he was going to have the clock, but he didn't." Said the young man seeking the prize: "And why didn't he get it?" "What's that to you?" snapped out the custodian, "that's not your business, and—you don't get the clock."—Home Journal.

—Doctor—"You say that your boy has fits, but surely you know that there is a very simple way to cure him." Mother—"Pray tell me how." Doctor—"Let him wear his elder brother's cast-off clothes."

HOW TO BE A HOSTESS.

The First Element of Success Is Tact and the Second and Third Are Tact.

The hostess without any tact says to you, when you step up to make your adieux and thank her for her kind invitation: "Yes, I thought you would be glad to meet some nice people." This is exasperating and reminds you of a woman who was presented at a social gathering to a very plain and rather old-fashioned-looking woman whose name she did not catch. In the course of the conversation the subject of Evanston being a desirable city for people of moderate circumstances arose, when she turned to the plainly-dressed woman and asked her if she were looking for an inexpensive house, the latter happening to be one of the rich old residents, who, however, had the tact and kindness not to set her right There is no success for the hostess who has no tact, however much money she may have. People may attend her social functions, but they will soon do so out of curiosity or for the sole purpose of making fun.

The clever hostess has learned to make an art of entertaining, and she has a pretty way of intentionally arranging bits of bric-a-brac, to which she skillfully draws attention when conversation begins to lag. The vicious-looking Dahomeyan ornament is meant to interest you and lead you to speak of it. A short time ago it was considered impolite for a person to notice anything particular in a friend's drawing-room by speaking of it, but now it is almost impolite if you do not. "You have discovered my conversational dodge for to-day," said a bright hostess, "but I am not at all ashamed to acknowledge that that volume of Whitman's poems was put there with a special purpose, together with that rare old glass vase and Russian enamel bonbon box." The table itself was a queer one with twisted legs and polished top, with a history of its own which the hostess was fond of telling. But though the successful hostess does not hesitate to learn her own lesson beforehand and make careful preparation to lead the talk from one object to another, she takes good care to do this in an easy, offhand manner which shall not be suspected at the moment. Not only the hostess, but the guest, if she would be considered a good conversationalist, is learning to prepare beforehand. Of course she can not tell which way the talk will drift, nor what will be the particular subject of discussion, but she has in mind a fresh anecdote or some interesting bit of news which she adroitly makes use of. She reads the book of the hour and forms her own opinions, ready to take sides in a discussion. In fact, the guest who does not exert herself to be agreeable and to utter something better than commonplaces is only a degree less objectionable than the tactless hostess who makes rude remarks.—Chicago Times.

THE CONDUCTOR'S TERROR.

How a Nervous Woman Gets On and Off a Street Car.

She is going to ride a mile or more on the street car, but hasn't gone two squares before she suddenly turns around to see if the conductor is where she can nod at him when she wants to get off. He is there and she feels relieved, but only for a minute. Then she begins to wish she was at the end of the seat, or nearer the door, or had walked. She crosses the left foot over the right, uncrosses, fidgets with her shopping bag and parasol, and twists aroundto see the conductor. Up goes his hand to the strap, but she suddenly decides not to get off—not just then.

"Hang that woman! Does she want to get off or no?" growls the conductor under his breath.

She moves parasol and bag over on the other side and crosses her feet again. For half a minute she is interested in a baby two seats ahead. The other half of the same minute is occupied in wondering if the man at the end of the seat will draw in his legs when she wants to pass.

"Fare, ma'am!"

It is the conductor. She'd forgotten all about the fare. She gives a jump, grabs the bag and looks for her purse. It isn't in there. She drops the bag and searches her pocket. Not there. She goes back to the bag and is scattering its contents on the seat when she remembers that she has ten cents in her glove. During the next square or two she recovers her self-possession sufficiently to sneer at two early summer bonnets promenading the avenue, and to wonder why the lady on the seat ahead persists in wearing such shoddy lace. Sudden start of alarm. It has just occurred to her that she can never, never get off that car gracefully. She begins to twist and wriggle. She grabs the bag in one hand and the parasol in the other and moves along the seat. Up goes the conductor's hand. False alarm. She'll ride another square or two. The conductor spits over his shoulder and talks to himself in low tones, and the man with the legs looks at her in a reproachful way.

"Conductor, stop the car!"

She is on her feet, motioning with parasol and bag. He rings the bell, but she climbs over the vast expanse of shanks and hoofs, grabs the railing with her right hand—changes to the left—lets go with both, drops off and stumbles to the sidewalk to find herself five squares short of her destination.—Detroit Free Press.

His Parting Shot.

"Mister," said the greasy man in the doorway, plaintively, "could ye spare a dollar to help a pore man along?"

"I think I could," answered the man at the desk, drawing a silver dollar from his pocket, looking fondly at the coin and dropping it back again, "but I'm not going to do it."

"Keep it?" rejoined the greasy caller in a husky voice. "Keep it! It's only worth forty-eight cents!"—Chicago Tribune.

—The family tutor was invited to a grand dinner party by his employers, and surveyed with intense satisfaction the half-dozen wine-glasses arranged in front of his plate. The footman came round with the wine. The young man presented the smallest of the glasses. "It is vin ordinaire," observed the waiter. "Ah! precisely," replied our ascetic philosopher; "I am reserving the larger glasses for the finer sorts."—La Chronique Bourgeoise.

HOME HINTS AND HELPS.

—How to Use Elderberries: Anyone knows that elderberries are decidedly "flat" when used alone, but I found by adding one part green grapes, to two parts elderberries, that a most toothsome pie "stock" resulted. I stew and remove the seeds of the grapes, then add them to the elderberries; sweeten to suit the taste.—Prairie Farmer.

—Meat Pate: Scrape a piece of lean beafsteak with a very dull knife. This removes the tender meat fibers, and leaves the tough connecting tissue; press the tender fibers into a thin cake or pate and broil on a toasting fork over a very hot fire. When done, season to taste. Eaten with toast or thin slices of bread, it makes a very delicate dish.—Housekeeper.

—Tea Biscuit: Scald one pint of milk. While hot add one tablespoonful of butter. When luke warm stir in one-half of a cup of yeast, one beaten egg and one quart of flour. Beat and work until smooth. Set in a warm place until light. When risen work softly and work gently. Cut into small biscuit, let rise again for thirty minutes or until light, and bake in a quick oven.—Boston Budget.

—Raspberry Acid: You will find that two or three tablespoonfuls of the following added to a glass of ice water makes an enjoyable beverage: Dissolve five ounces of tartaric acid in two quarts of water; pour it on twelve pounds of red raspberries in a large bowl; let it stand twenty-four hours; then strain without pressing; to a pint of this liquor add one and a half pounds of white sugar; stir until it dissolves. Bottle and leave uncorked for several days; then it is ready for use.—Prairie Farmer.

—English Fruit Pudding: Half cup butter, half cup sugar, three eggs, one and a half cups flour, quarter pound of raisins, four figs, two ounces citron, grated peel of a lemon. Cream the butter and sugar and stir it into the eggs, beaten very light. Mix in the flour and the grated lemon-rind, and, last, put in the fruit. The raisins should be seeded and cut in half, the citron and figs minced fine, and all well dredged with flour. Steam it in a greased mold for three hours.—Outlook.

—Spanish Winde: Whisk the whites of eight eggs to a very stiff snow. Flavor with a teaspoonful of best vanilla extract. Mix with these one pound of pulverized sugar, very gradually, so that the eggs will not be made to run. Whisk the whole until all the sugar is in. Make a sheet tin hot, then rub it over with white wax; drop on this with a teaspoon little piles of snow, which must not touch. Sift a little sugar over, and bake them in a rather slow oven. They must be merely tinged a cream-color.—Harper's Bazar.

COVERS FOR FLOOR CUSHIONS.

New Fashions in Denim and Awning Cloth for Outdoor Pillowcases.

This summer floor pillows for any cool corner of the piazza or doorstep are an important part of the household furniture. Cushions for such hard use should be covered with more serviceable material than what is used for the fashionable sofa pillow. Especially those meant to use upon the piazza should be of such stuff that an occasional sudden shower will not work their ruin.

Denim—"that everlasting denim" as somebody ungratefully calls the useful material—is used for these big pillows, and for those people who are tired of the blue denim the new red and blue weaving is a pleasant change. Awning cloth, which is as strong and almost as cheap as denim, is used either plain or worked in heavy linen floss. The blue striped awnings with a worked design in blue thread through the white stripes are cool looking and pretty. There are besides these inexpensive cottons delightful colored linens to be had in plain dark or light shades at the shops dealing in "art embroidery materials." These pleasant-colored linens are as good a background as possible for needlework and can be washed as easily as towels.

The same fashion, too, of fastening fine rugs around floor cushions is as much in favor for those outdoors as it has been indoors all winter for "inglenook pillows." The rug coverings, while not as agreeable to the touch on a hot day as thin linen or cotton, have the merit of good coloring and add to the picturesque effect of a piazza.—Chicago Tribune.

Stylish Summer Costumes.

Charming summer toilets, copying French models, are made of soft lustrous silks in white, gray, fawn, old rose, violet and stem green, with dots and hair stripes of delicately contrasting color. The bodice opens over a blouse front of lace and is finished with a large lace collar and a short circular seamless basque-piece of the silk. The sleeves are very full frem shoulder to elbow and end in failing frills of lace. On some of the models the bodice is cut out quite low in the neck, and in this case a square of chiffon is laid in soft folds and arranged to drape the neck and cover the shoulders; and it is quite a serious matter to get the folds and points gracefully arranged, for each is narrow and long. A silver belt or girdle in filigree is at the waist. Suede kid shoes and a handsome fan hung from the long ribbon loops are the pretty accessories of these very pretty toilets. Gray or pale primrose-yellow gloves are worn in preference to the tans or any tint.—N. Y. Post.

The "Only" Lemonade.

Almost every housewife thinks she knows how to make lemonade, but only those who use this rule are right in their belief: To every quart of water use three lemons and the rind of one, taking care to peel the rind very thin, using nothing but the yellow outside. Cut this into pieces and put with the juice and powdered sugar in a jug with a cover, using two ounces of sugar to every quart. Boil the water as for tea, then pour it over the lemon and sugar. Cover, let it cool.—Chicago Times.

An Energetic Housekeeper.

Little Miss (at dime museum)—Oh, there's the double-headed girl, and she's got four hands and four feet. Wouldn't mamma like to have her in the kitchen, though?

Little Boy—I'm 'fraid she wouldn't suit. She's got four feet, but they can't go in two directions at once.—Good News.

Calling Her Down.

Perdita—No; but I'll be a sister to you.

Ten Brooke (cuttingly)—Dear me, are you old enough to remember a joke like that?—Truth.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

If you wish the lightest, sweetest, finest cake, biscuit and bread, Royal Baking Powder is indispensable in their preparation.

THE ROYAL Baking Powder surpasses all others in leavening power, in purity and wholesomeness, and is used generally in families, exclusively in the most celebrated hotels and restaurants, by the United States Army and Navy, and wherever the best and finest food is required. All teachers of cooking schools and lecturers upon culinary matters use and recommend the Royal.

Chicago Health Authorities Certify.

"I find the ROYAL BAKING POWDER superior to all the others in every respect. It is purest and strongest.

PICKINGS FOR THE BOTANIST.

SWEET WILLIAMS (dianthus barbatus) preserve their bloom for a long time in water, as cut for the toilet table or for the sitting room decorations.

GARDEN paths can be kept free from weeds and grass by pouring over them boiling hot suds on wash days, putting a handful of salt in each bucket of suds.

THE flowers of the yellow sweet sultan (centaurea suaveolens) are large and full, of clear dandelion yellow, with good stiff stems, and they last a long time.

THE Chinese magnolias taken from the nurseries when two or three years old, and successfully transplanted, will sometimes bloom the following season, and annually thereafter.

IT is not generally known that the wistaria grows from root cuttings. Layering, however, is a very good method where there is room for it. The trailing shoots root by being buried in the earth—but root better if a slit is first made in the shoot.

CURIOUSLY tenacious of life is the ivy geranium. Branches cut off and kept partly immersed in water live on for months, not only with small loss of vitality in the larger leaves, but even with some development of leaf buds and possibly some growth of new wood.

OVER THE RAILS.

WHEN a man is killed on a railroad in Persia the natives pull up the tracks for miles and boycott the road.

A MOLDAVIAN lady is at her own expense constructing a railway from one of her estates to the nearest town.

THE Railway Age has issued its usual half-yearly statement of track laying, which shows that only 95 lines, aggregating 1,014.96 miles, have been built from January 1 to June 30 of the present year. It believes that the total construction for the whole year will be about 3,000 miles.

The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

--Old papers for sale at this office.

--Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

--The band will have a picnic next Sunday at lake Sarah.

--Arther Parsons and Roy Wilder are spending a few days camping on lake Sarah.

--Mr. Woolford, of Rockford, has been engaged in raising and repairing the Young's hotel property this week.

--A new face presented itself at the delivery window at the post office yesterday morning. The mail is handed out with more Grace than ever before.

--The Delano Board of Education met Saturday evening and organized, electing C. H. Vorse, president; L. M. Maxfield, secretary; I. Gutzwiller, Jr., treasurer.

--Len Dedrick has men at work, and Len himself is not standing around doing nothing, tearing down the old Wright county bank vault and removing the building preparatory to building a fine brick veneered hotel.

--A little daughter of John Stien's was carrying a couple of milk crocks Wednesday evening when she slipped and fell breaking a crock and cutting an ugly wound near the wrist on the arm.

--The M. E. lawn social at John Cunningham's was a success. A large delegation from Watertown, Delano and other parts of the country attended. Miss Julia deserves credit for her energy. Gross proceeds $12.45.

--The Y. P. S. C. E will give a social at the Village Hall Thursday evening, August 17. Various nationalities will be represented by booths. Refreshments will be served. Music and tableaus. No charge at the door. All come and enjoy a social time.

--C. A. Buell, the famous single tax and free trade man made us a pleasant visit on Wednesday. He travels in the interest of the Minnesota Democratic Association, and seems to be meeting with success even in these hard times. He is an earnest and faithful worker.

--If people would quit scowling about hard times, and follow this advice, everything would be prosperous: If you owe anybody, pay them as soon as possible. The man to whom you are indebted may be indebted to his neighbor and is unable to pay on your account. A dollar may pay a good many debts in a day's time if kept moving. Don't carry money around in your pockets when it belongs to somebody else. By keeping money moving times can be made easier by far than they are at present.

--The arbitrary rulings of the Delano School Board will not stand law. Don't allow them to frighten you into paying a lot of assessed damage on Free Text books, by holding the books for pay. They can't do that. This country has had free schools too long to respect any such rules and regulations clearly in opposition to the State School laws. They had as well ask you to pay for the chalk used last term, or that $43 worth of stationery and printing they got of I. Gutzwiller, Jr., as to ask for the damage on books bought as these were, without law. As long as you continue to allow yourselves to be humbugged you will continue to be humbugged.

The free school is the boast of our land. The school board have publicly announced that all damage on Free Text books must be paid before children can have their books. What has become of our Free School? Grant this and more tuition will be asked. We have had experience. It was voted to buy $60 worth of school books, afterwards some more. Now it is claimed there is about $350 worth on hand, most of which the Treasurer is liable to have to refund double the amount paid for. Perhaps this is why they are so anxious the children should buy them. We also voted about ten years ago to build a six thousand dollar school house, today we owe, according to the financial report, $12,800 on this school house. It is about time to hold the board down to law.

--O. L. Billings called around Friday evening to enquire if we didn't "have any sense?" We informed him that we thought we had a little. The subject of his wrath was that the GAZETTE had some way or another, in reporting the trial of Casper Jankula, for selling intoxicating liquors to minors, said "O. L. Billings was complaining witness Jos. Van Eman," when it should have been "O. L. Billings was defendant's attorney; complaining witness, Jos. Van. Eman." We told the judge he ought not mind a thing like that, we didn't believe anyone would be misled by the mistake, when he intimated that it was a mistake made on purpose to injure him. We assure him that so far as we are aware, it was a simple mistake of the printer. Had it been true that he was complaining witness it would have been no discredit to him.

--Brick $8 per 1000 at John Coolen's.

--If you need lime, call on John Coolen. 27.

--If you want brick go to John Coolen's.

--A fine Gar Scott threshing outfit, 16 horse power engine was unloaded here to day for Messrs. Munson and Aider, near Watertown.

--Hanseman & Kohler's new show window and the way they have arranged their grocery and crockery stocks as well as the store in general, shows the proprietors to have some city tasts.

--Too much drink finally succeeded in bringing "old Dusa" to the ground in a crippled condition, this morning. His horse ran away and threw him out breaking his collar bone and otherwise injuring him. It is very unsafe to load to heavily. He is a respectable farmer.

--We see by advertisements in quite a number of our Republican exchanges that there is a "Training school for Nurses" at St. Peter. Also several "Good Normal Schools" in the State. Whether none but republicans need apply we have not ascertained, but judging from the absence of notices in the democratic papers it has a tendency to look so.

--We read with pleasure quite an interesting article in the Methodist Herald, by Mrs. O. W. Crawford, subject "Hints for the Thoughtful" on World' Fair, suggesting that those who cannot attend can read and look up pictures. If they preserve them they will have a good history.

--The Anoka Union says the surest index to a man's character is the date after his name on a subscription list to a paper. If it reads up to date or in advance the man is surely honest, progressive, of good business traits and a hustler. If it reads three, four, five or six years behind the present date, the man is not progressive, is slack, and ten chances to one never will pay his debts. Just gain access to some subscription list or ask any editor and see if the above statements are not verified. In going over the Union's subscriptson list the fact that those who pay their subscription promptly are the best business men and the best working men was very apparent. There are exceptions of course, and if any one should not like the above, out of politeness they would be told that they were exceptions, but the editor does a heap of thinking.

That Dassel School.

Judge Vandenburgh handed down the following decisions in the supreme court yesterday:

Austin B. Young, as receiver of the estate of Stevens & Co., respondent, vs. Board of Education of Independent School District No. 47, Dassel, Meeker county, appellant.

Syllabus: Where the officers of a school district without lawful authority borrow and expend money for the completion of a school house, no liability attaches to the district thereof notwithstanding the benefit received from such expenditure. No estoppel or ratification can be inferred from its retention or enjoyment of the improvement in such case, for it has not opportunity to reject it.

County Cullings.

David Gorman, has been appointed deputy Internal Revenue Collector at Litchfield. His district comprises eleven counties.

Hon John Holler informed us a few days since that he threshed 135 acres of oats and only got 1750 bushels, on the Monticello prairie.

Burglars are reported from many neighborhoods. Mr. Vohlbrecht, at Hanover, and Wright at Montrose appear to be the nearest to Delano, that have been robbed.

The text book is allied with the teacher. To make the schools free, the former must be furnished free of charge as well as the latter.—Minneapolis Journal.

From an able article in Senator Eaton's paper, entitled "Free Text Books" we copy the following which will be of interest as schools are soon to begin:

"Books are easily defaced and destroyed, the cost of each individual book is small, only a few cents, and the destruction of a single book is only a very small loss but destruction of many books will aggregate a very large sum which must each year be met at the public cost. How else can it be done? It cannot be collected from the children and only from parents as other claims are collected, by suit at law. What an immense out lay there would be in attorney's fees alone in bringing suits to recover all these small amounts and how many parents there would be found even fairly well to do, yet who own nothing that could be reached by an execution. The attempt has been made in some places to suspend and expel children from school in whose hands books are damaged or destroyed until the damage is paid. But school boards clearly have no right or authority to do anything of the kind and are themselves law breakers as often as they do this. We have a law on our statute books that provides for compelling the attendance of children at school, but if suspensions and expulsions are allowed the law is perverted and instead of having a law for compulsory attendence it becomes a law for compulsory absence from school. And besides all this, it is beyond all question the fact and the law that when any building or other thing has been provided for common use at the public cost that individual members of the community cannot be required nor compelled to again pay for the occupation or use of the same and when text books are once bought and paid for with public money, they at once become public property and no citizen can be required to pay for the use of them."

A Great Public Library.

Any book you want, loaned to you, in city or country, anywhere in the United States, for as long or as short a time as you want it, at an average cost of only one cent a day, is the offer of The American Cooperative Library recently organized in New York. This undertaking successfully carried out will give book-readers everywhere better facilities than heretofore enjoyed outside of the reach of less than a dozen of the largest libraries in the principal cities. Books can be ordered either direct from New York, through neighborhood Book Clubs or from country Postmasters, Newsdealers, Booksellers or others who will act as agents. A 160-page catalogue is sent free to any applicant enclosing a two cent stamp; members of the Library are not limited to this, but may order any book in current literature suitable for general circulation. Any further information desired will be sent free on request. Address THE AMERICAN COOPERATIVE LIBRARY, 57 Rose St., New York.

Attention, School Boards!

Look out for the undersigned. I will call on you as early as possible with a full line of Sheldon's school books. Reserve your orders till I come. These books are recommended by the County Superintendent.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

THE BABY.

The little, tottering baby feet,
With faltering steps and low,
With pattering echoes soft and sweet,
Into my heart they go;
They also go in grimy plays,
In muddee poo's and dusty ways;
Then through the house in treacherous maze
They wander to and fro.

The baby hands that clasp my neck
With touches dear to me
Are the same hands that smash and wreck
The bakstand fort to see:
They pound the mirror with a can;
They rend the manuscript in twain;
Widespread destruction they ordain
In wasteful jubilee

The dreamy murmuring voice
That coos its little tune,
That makes the listening heart rejoice,
Like birds in leafy June.
Can wake in midnight dark and still,
And all the air with howling fill,
That splits the ear with echoes shrill,
Like comets out of tune.

SPEAKER CRISP is expected to announce his committees on Monday next.

CONGRESS is wrestling with the financial question. Every true American citizen hopes they will arrive at a solution that will quiet the distrustful feeling throught the country, and restore the feeling of prosperity to which they were accostomed.

TALK about calamity howlers. Why the Republicans are lapproving their short opportunity to attribute everything evil to the fact that there has been a change in the admiaistration. If a change has this effect, we had better keep the democrats in for a good while, now that they are in.

THE Behring Sea seal fishery question has finally been arbitrated on the first five points were decided against the United States. But the use of fire arms has been prohibited in taking seals. A sixty mile limit has been made with a closed season beginning May 1 and ending July 31. Pelagic sealing is supposed to be practically ended.

THE McKinley bill has a tariff of $2 per ton on hay and lo! and behold, hay in England is said to be worth $10.00 per ton in Delano $5. The tariff on wheat was raised to 25 cents per bushel and now wheat is worth 42 cents per pushel here. Pork also feels the effect of the times and fell about $9 per barrel, in Chicago, in a few minutes one day during the week. There must be a higher power than tariff laws that rules the markets.

SOME of Senator Eatons quotations from American Statesmen need explaining. Perhaps the Senator is equal to the task. We would like to know how he would reconcile the condition that confronts us that the eastern states are in many places growing up to weeds. That once fine farms are now turned out to the commons and that valuable residences and buildings are going to decay for want of tenants, near villages that are full of work shops with the following quolation he gives us this week from Bogen Herman. "The market follows the workshop. That country which has its fields farthest from its manufactories and furnaces is poor in proportion as the distance is great. The power and greatness and glory of our nation is due more to the observance of this principle than to all other causes combined."

IT HAS for some time been customary to introduce into county politics some petty quarrel among individuals or cliques and ask voters to elect men on those issues and to loose sight, entirely, of principles of party, or even of honesty in some instances. This is wrong. Men should be nominated by each party that are as good as the party can furnish. men against whose character nothing can be brought, and men who firmly believe in the principles they advocate for running the government in all its departments. Men who are honest and reliable at home, and will be the same wherever they may be placed. Men that nobody will be ashamed of, nor afraid to recommend for the offices for which they aspire. If all parties adhere to this rule, good honest men will fill most offices, and a good government will be the consequence.

"The Ferris wheel with arms of steel
High as a tower will wind you up;
If you should fall, for good and all
The doctors they will wind you up."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 11, 1893.

President Cleveland's message to Congress has been as closely studied as any similar document ever was by members of Congress and it is evident that it is going to be a powerful factor in the financial legislation of the session. It appearently opposes the ideas of many democrats in both House and Senate, just as his celebrated tariff message of 1887 did, but honest and conscientious belief is conspicuous in every sentence of it. And the opposition to what are known as silver democrats is more apparent than real, for they all agree with the President's recommendation for the repeal of the silver purchasing clause of the Sherman law, only differing as to what shall be substituted. The message recommends the repeal and leaves the question of a substitute to the wisdom of Congress, and nine-tenths of the democrats are certain that the recommendation as to repeal will be followed and that other financial legislation, which will be equally satisfactory to the silver democrats and to President Cleveland will be agreed upon by the democrats in both House and Senate and that the present efforts of the republicans to split the democratic party on the silver question will fail.

Acting on the maxim quoted in the President's message—"He gives twice who gives quickly"—the democrats in the House, both silver and anti-silver men, are trying to reach an agreement to up and decide the silver question without waiting for the appointment of committees and the adoption of rules. It will be easy to take the matter up without an agreement, only a majority vote being required, but if an agreement can be reached upon just what is to be voted upon and how much time is to be given to discussion much time will be saved that would necessarily be wasted if no agreement is made, to say nothing of the possibility of endless fillibustering.

The silver men have in caucus decided to vote for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law, if the bill for its repeal provides for the free coinage of silver on such a ratio as will provide and maintain the parity between gold and silver. The fact that no particular ratio is mentioned is significant. It means that the caucus of silver democrats did not believe it possible to succeed in maintaining the present ratio of 16 to 1 and that they are willing to increase the ratio.

It is now claimed that a careful poll of the House, made this week, shows a majority of 35 in favor of the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law. The senate is more doubtful, and it is much more difficult to ascertain how Senators whose positions are not clearly defined will vote, but strong efforts are now being made to bring the democratic Senators together, and the indications point to success. A caucus of democratic Senators this week appointed a committee of five—Gorman, Ransom, Gray, Vorhees and Blackburn—to consider and report a plan with that end in view. The republicans, unintentionally, of course, added largely to the probability of united democratic action in the Senate by their attempts to make political capital, which were promptly and properly rebuked by Senator Gorman, out of the present financial situation.

The Senate committee on Finance, of which Senator Vorhees is chairman, held its first meeting yesterday. The committee did not lack for business either, as more than a score of financial bills which have been introduced in the Senate have been referred to that committee. A majority of this committee are bimetalists, but some of the most prominent of them, including the chairman, have declared their belief in the viciousness of the Sherman law and their willingness to vote for its unconditional repeal. The Senate is naturally deliberate in all its actions, so it will not be surprising if the House takes up the silver question before this committee reports a bill to the Senate. The resolution of Senator Lodge, of Force bill fame, directing the committee to report a bill for the repeal of the Sherman law and providing that a vote should be taken thereupon on the 22d of this month was only a bit of republican buncome, and the adoption of the resolution would have surprised no one more than its author.

The bitterest pill in the President's message, for the republicans to swallow, was the plain statement that he expected Congress to obey the will of the people and proceed to reform the iniquitious tariff as soon as the finances have been looked after. Because the troubles brought upon the country by republican financial legislation have so conspiciously forced themselves upon public attention of late, republicans have allowed themselves to believe that the McKinley law was to be undisturbed by this Congress. They know better now and the knowledge doesn't please them.

McGary vs. Extra Session.

INDEPENDENCE, Aug. 15.

EDITOR GAZETTE:—In looking over the President's message and the situation of things as they confront us politically and financially, I am lead to believe that our situation, as a nation, rather critical.

Poor crop, low prices, and a general depression of business, indicate that we have got hard times.

By many these hard times and the lack of confidence in the moneyed man and capitalist to invest their wealth in the industries of our country is charged up to the democratic party or to the present administration.

In part perhaps this may be true, as regard to lack of confidence. But as yet the present administration has been guilty of nothing criminal, unless it was in calling that extra session of Congress, which I think a very foolish piece of business. If every thing was prosperous in this country, and all our business relations on a square footing and a solid foundation, when we changed from Republican to Democratic administration, I can't see so much cause for lack of confidence, etc.

Now in order to regulate the evils upon us fix up our monetary system and restore confidence to the people the President has called extra session. For what, only one thing he says, to repeal the silver purchasing act, put on the statute books by the republican party in 1890. In his message he refers to nothing else. Is is possible while seemingly in the midst of prosperity, that that law alone has brought such a calamity upon us? We answer no. To me it seems like child play to call an extra session of congress just to repeal one act.

It would be well for the people to learn who it was that dictated this calling of an extra session. Was it the moneyed men and bankers of Wall street or the day laborers?

Do not think but what this silver purchasing act could have been kept up for a few months more without bringing ruin and destruction upon the country. When Congress met in regular session the first of next December, then they could repeal the act. To me it looks as if there was a nigger in the fence, somewhere.

At the present time many hundred thousand day labors are out of imployment. No money, no work and many are on the verge of starvation, and what are they to do the coming winter? If it was nessesary to call an extra session of Congress it should have been done early in the summer, but at this late day, they cannot get things properly adjusted before winter so as to materially help the laboring men.

This great cry about silver and cheap money put into the mouths of fools and demagogues is calculated to cause a good deal of disturbence among the people. The constitution of the U. S. says Congress has the right to coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin etc., and does not the stamp of the government make it legal tender? The President does not recommend anything in the place of the Silver Purchasing act if that law is repealed unconditionally and that is what the capitalists want. Then there will be a rush for a gold standard.

Who is at the bottom of all this. Whether it be republican or democrat, Jew or Gentile I say, it is a fraud, in order for this country to be prosperous financially we must have the two metals, gold and silver, for money. For thousands of years gold and silver have been inseparable companions, and it is hardly possible, that is if the people are wise, that they will be separated.

It would be well for you to write to your Congressman warning him not to vote for the demonetizing of silver, for that is just what these designing men are after. Too much silver, they say, who is it for the last twenty years in every campaign has been howling about American industries, they must be protected, etc., is not our silver mining one of our greatest industries?

But, Mr. Editor, my five minutes for debate on this subject is up, and I must stop. But when I see, or at least I think I see, how the people of this country are being made dups of by designing men, I wax warm in the chase, and I had rather resort to shotgun policy than see the liberties of this country destroyed and the poor crying for bread.

It seems that when God made this earth He did more for these United States, whereby man might create wealth and happiness than any other place under the sun, and yet the people are abusing these God given rights and privileges. I was one who voted for Cleveland for president, and I have not repented for it yet either, but it is possible that I may, for I think he had better been off fishing than calling an extra session of congress.

When our country is invaded by a foreign foe, it is the poor man who first offers himself to protect his country and the free institutions given to us by our Revolutionary fathers. Then let our national congress legislate for his interest as well as for the man of money. But have they done it? History answers no. Sine die.

A. S. Gardner who is still at St. Paul, met with a peculiar circumstance in his throat ailment a few days ago. While suffering from one of his frequent choking experiences, almost suffocating him, and in his struggles to regain his breath he managed to raise from his throat a large amount of watery and bloody matter which was accompanied by a bone about the size of a kernal of corn. A few days later he raised another piece of bone apparently a part of the first piece. It seems to be the opinion of the physicians that the bone lodged in the throat in swallowing meat. Mr. Gardner recollects of his having difficulty in swallowing some cold beef a few years ago, which he then supposed had passed to his stomach. His speedy recovery seems to be now in prospect.

On Thursday morning our station agent, Mr. Brown, having received notice of the station at Cokato being robbed of some cash saw a party get off the morning train whom he suspected to be the thief and followed him, at the same time hailing him with a request to stop, which the party refused to, and instead increased his gait to a speed which was beyond the powers of the agent to overcome. Perhaps the party may be captured before he reaches Minneapolis.

Hennepin County Schools.

Mrs. A. S. Beede is numbered among the few distinguished educators of the state now being mentioned as probable appointee to the position of State Superintendent of Public Instruction, to succeed Sup't Kiehl, resigned.

Miss Lena Grave will teach a six month's term of school in what is known as the Spurzem district near Loretto, Miss Grave is one of Hennepin's youngest teachers, but has taught several terms with marked success.

Prof. J. T. Harter, of the southern part of the county, Prof. G. M. Henry of the northern part, and Prof. Green, of the interior, are mentioned as probable candidates for the Republican nomination for school superintendent, and it is very generally believed that their names will all come before the convention which will convein a little less than a year hense.

Bayard T. Shaver has engaged teach the school in district No. 63 the coming year. Salary $60 per month.

Prof. J. T. Pribble has been re-engaged to teach the Osseo schoool, where he has been teaching for ten years.

Hennepin county's present board of county commissioners are all Roman Catholics and many people throughout the county are wondering why they would confirm H. C. Wilcox, a man noted for his prejudices against Catholicity, as assistant to Superintendent Lewis. While the Shaver fight was on Chowen, Lewis and Wilcox endeavored to induce the legislature then in session, to take the confirmation power out of the hands of the commissioners because they were Catholics and supposed to be using their official power to get a Catholic into place. Of course the commissioners had nothing of the kind in view, but Lewis firmly believed that they had, and to give color to his charge against them appointed Wilcox, in the firm belief that they would at once reject him. The commissioners would then have to bear the stigma of being bigotted in the matter. So certain did Lewis feel that he had Mr. Baker standing ready to take the place. But it appears he did not let Baker into the scheme, but told him to come on down to Minneapolis that day and he would be appointed, confirmed and allowed to begin work at once. And Baker in good faith withdrew his application for the Rockford school and acceded to the Superintendent's wishes.

Wilcox is said to have some aspirations to the superintendency himself now and is doing his utmost to court favor with the Catholics. Madam Rumor says that Lewis, Shaver and Wilcox are already planning to re-capture the superintendency, and are feeding the Catholics taffy at a great rate. They are just now giving the printing to a Catholic paper and are honeying around the Catholic teachers with a view of getting their support. The commissioners did not wish to prosecute Lewis or to dictate to him in any sense what ever. They strove in good faith to get something done in the line of school supervision for which so much money is paid out of the pockets of the people yearly, and for which they had received almost nothing for a long time, that was all.

THE first mention of ice cream that is found in our history appears to be in the account of the festivities following Washington's first inauguration as president, in the city of New York, in 1789. The new confection was quite a sensation at the time, and probably helped to increase the popularity of Dolly Adams.

THE immigration to the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1893, was 497,936, against 619,320 in 1892. Germany sent the largest number, 96,-315, and Switzerland the smallest, 5,-252. The loss as compared with 1892 was 121,701, or nearly twenty per cent. For the month of June the arrivals were 67,726, against 73,120 in June, 1892, a loss of 7,394 or a little over ten per cent. The only countries that show an increase for the year are Italy, Netherlands and Scotland. They are not required to eat at the family table unless they wish to. They are expected to report any incivility or inattention on the part of servants to the master of the house. The Behring Sea Decision.

PARIS, Aug. 15.—The decision of the Behring sea tribunal of arbitration between England and the United States was handed down at 11:07 o'clock this morning.

The five points of article 6 are decided against the United States.

A close season is established to begin May 1 and to continue until July 31. This close season shall be observed both in the North Pacific ocean and in Behring sea.

A protected zone is established extending for 60 miles around the islands.

Pelagic sealing is allowed outside the zone in Behring sea from Aug. 1.

The use of firearms in sealing is prohibited.

The decision on all points involving exclusive jurisdiction over the Behring sea is against the United States.

The American arbitrators have expressed their satisfaction with the text of the decision.

Baron de Courcel, after the decision was rendered, thanked the arbitrators for the close and intelligent attention they had brought to bear upon the case. Lord Hannen and Senator Morgan, in replying to the president of the tribunal, acknowledged his courtesy and his hospitality.

The American arbitrators believe that the regulations decided upon by the tribunal mean practically the end of pelagic sealing, and that they are better terms than were heretofore offered to the United States by Great Britain as a settlement of the questions involved.

A BOLD THIEF'S WORK.

He Grabs a Bag Containing $5,000 in Gold in a St. Paul Bank and Makes His Escape.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Aug. 16.—The St. Paul bankers are dazed over a robbery at the First national bank Monday morning in which a man alone was able to seize a $5,000 bag of gold in the presence of twenty people and disappear in a crowd. The police have been searching for him ever since, but there are small prospects that he will be caught.

Renaldo Lares, a trusted representative of the Merchants' national bank, accompanied by I. H. Jacobs, porter of the Merchants', had just come into the First national bank to make a settlement with the clearing house. The funds consisted of three bags containing $5,000 each in gold in a small steel box, and other money, making in all about $20,-000. The box was fastened to the porter, Jacobs, by means of handcuffs, and the two men carried the box when on the street between them. When they entered the bank there was nothing unusual noticed in the office. About twenty men stood at the various windows and desks attending to business. Arriving at the teller's window Lares opened the box and removing the bags placed them on the window ledge at his right side. He stood between the post and the window, while the porter, Jacobs, stood at his left, between Lares and the door.

Resting the bags for the moment on the ledge, Lares began to pay in the loose money, and was busy with this when he heard a step at his right, and, turning instantly, he saw the robber grab one of the bags and dart around the post toward the door. Lares made a leap and succeeded in reaching the door almost as quickly as the thief and would no doubt have been able to catch him or at least follow him had not a man, undoubtedly the accomplice of the thief, here interposed by crowding Lares to the wall and giving the man with the bag a clear sweep.

In an instant everything was excitement: the clerks and clearing house men rushed out into the general banking office, but the gold and robbers were as completely gone as though the earth had closed over them.

PREY FOR SPECULATORS.

Mrs. Martha Mitchell's Complaint Against Her Son, the Wisconsin Senator.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 16.—In her petition filed in the probate court asking for an accounting of the estate of her husband, the late Alexander Mitchell, Miss Martha Mitchell charges her son, United States Senator John L. Mitchell, as executor of the estate, with a lack of business experience, and alleges that he has become "the victim of iron mine adventures and stock jobbing speculators." Senator Mitchell is required to appear in the probate court the first Tuesday in September and show cause on various matters pertaining to the estate of his father, among them why he should not file an inventory of the estate, and why he should not be removed as executor of the estate and a receiver appointed in his place to provide and carry out the trusts and provisions of his father's will. Pending the hearing on the petition Senator Mitchell is enjoined from incumbering any of the estate to such an extent as to injure or destroy the rights of Mrs. Martha Mitchell, his mother, and David Ferguson Mitchell, her son.

FOREST FIRES IN WISCONSIN.

One Hamlet Is Wiped Out and Two Children Are Reported Missing.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., Aug. 16.—Forest fires are raging extensively along the South Shore railroad east of this city. The extent of damage done cannot be definitely learned, as the wires are down. Citizens here who are well informed as to the nature of the burning country say the loss of standing timber will be heavy. Bruce Crossing, a little hamlet 100 miles from here, was practically wiped out Sunday night. Much railway rolling stock has been destroyed. The wife and child of a lumberman are missing and are supposed to have perished in the flames. Special trains have been sent out on the South Shore road to render assistance to the inhabitants and care for the company's property.

FOR A GREAT MUSEUM.

How It Is Proposed to Commemorate the Big Fair in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—The world's fair directors have appointed Director General Davis, President Higinbotham and Mr. James W. Scott a committee to form an organization of citizens with the object of establishing a world's fair museum of anthropological, ethnological, mineral and other classes of exhibits after the close of the fair period. It is well known that an immense collection of these exhibits will be left to the disposition of the public, both by states and foreign countries, as it will not pay to send them home again. The object is to secure these for Chicago not only as souvenirs of the great fair, but as objects of educational value and popular entertainment.

Eight Lives Lost.

ALMOTA, Wash., Aug. 16.—The Union Pacific steamer Annie Faxon was blown up Monday morning at Wade's wharf, 7 miles below here. Eight persons were killed and all on board injured. She carried five passengers. The vessel was literally blown to pieces.

Dr. Buchanan Sentenced.

NEW YORK, Aug. 16.—Dr. Robert W. Buchanan has been sentenced by Recorder Smyth to die in the electric chair in the week beginning October 2. Buchanan was convicted of killing his second wife by slow poison in order to obtain her fortune. He afterward remarried his first wife, who had obtained a divorce from him.

Death of Prof. M. A. Newell.

BALTIMORE, Md., Aug. 16.—Prof. M. A. Newell, one of Maryland's foremost educators, with a national reputation as author of school works, died at Havre de Grace Monday morning.

Killed in a Family Fight.

MACON, Mo., Aug. 16.—Dr. D. V. Howard, of Bucklin, while in a fight with his wife and his wife's brother-in-law, was shot and killed Sunday night at New Boston. Mrs. Howard was living with her brother-in-law pending divorce proceedings.

Four Daughters in One Family Insane.

MARENGO, Ill., Aug. 16.—Kate and Jessie Hezlep were adjudged insane Monday. The jury in each case recommended that the girls be sent to the Elgin insane hospital. These will make four daughters who have gone insane in this family.

HORROR IN CHICAGO.

Fire in a Hotel Cuts Off the Escape of Many Guests—Seven Lose Their Lives and Three Times as Many Are Injured.

CHICAGO, Aug. 16.—Fire started in the office of the Senate hotel on the second floor at 184 Madison street a few minutes before 7 o'clock Monday morning and ran through the building rapidly, spreading panic and death among the guests which it awakened from sleep. The following is the record of fatalities, which number seven, the injured numbering twenty-one, of whom perhaps four will die:

Fanny Reede, of New York, widow, 27 years of age, chambermaid at Great Eastern hotel, corner Sixty-fifth street and St. Lawrence avenue; suffocated.

James W. Short, jumped from third story window; picked up dead; no occupation given.

James Taylor, New York, injured by jumping; died at county hospital.

Harry Godfrey, aged 7, son of Jay Godfrey, of Buchanan, Mich., burned and suffocated.

Philip Kronberg, of Little Rock, Ark.; 21 years old, skull fractured and legs crushed by jumping from third-story window, burned about head and face, taken to county hospital and died at 4 p. m.

Dan Tucker, aged about 25 years, board marker at the Hawthorne race track; suffocated in bed.

William Ulfrey, 17 years old, nephew of James Godfrey. His head and arms badly burned and hands cut by breaking glass in the window. Taken to county hospital, where he died at 5 p. m.

William Barabino, the night clerk, was among the first to discover the fire. He was waiting for the day clerk to relieve him shortly before 7 o'clock. He stepped into the wash-room, and while there says he heard a queer rattling noise in the office which might have been caused by the falling of a lamp. On opening the wash-room door he found the hallway and office full of smoke. He raised the cry of "fire" and made his escape down the stairway. By this time the flames were climbing from the starting point on the second floor up the stairway to the third floor. Smoke was pouring from the windows, and a 2-11 alarm was bringing the clanging fire engines to the spot. The noise awoke the guests and they rushed half dressed to the windows.

Among the first to escape was Joseph Wilson, who had a room in the rear of the third floor. He was dressing when he detected smoke in the house. He wakened his roommate, Harry Gavana, and together they made a hurried round of the rooms trying to rouse the guests. Wilson then slid down an iron pipe into the alley in the rear. Gavana lingered a few moments and then started down the pipe. He was part way down when a man named Morton started after him. Morton seemed confused and lost his hold. Gavana was knocked from the pipe, and the two men fell a distance of 15 feet. Gavana escaped injury. Morton was picked up unconscious.

The next person to appear at the rear window was Edward Shore. He was badly burned, and seemed crazed with fear and pain as he leaned from the window. He threw his hands wildly over his head, and then toppled into the alley below. His dead body was removed to Sigmund's morgue, 73 Fifth avenue.

While these tragedies were being enacted in the rear a great crowd near the Madison street entrance were the spectators of an equal horror. A man supposed to be James Taylor, a Chicago horseman, appeared at a third-story window almost nude. He hesitated a moment as a volume of flame shot out around him. Then he jumped to the stone flags below. He was picked up bleeding and mangled and removed to the county hospital.

A moment later there was a crash of glass and Jay Godfrey appeared at another window. He had broken the sash in frantic efforts to get fresh air. His daughter Annie, 13 years old, stood beside him. His wife and son Harry were still in the building.

A ladder was run up to them and the firemen helped them to make the descent. Godfrey was not badly injured, but the daughter was terribly burned, and was hurried away to a hospital.

Another crash at another window came, and F. A. Coons appeared holding his wife. His 15-year-old daughter Flora was beside him, and William Ullery right behind him. A ladder was quickly run up and the party taken to the ground. Mrs. Coons was badly burned and was taken to Mercy hospital. Flora had sunk half suffocated on the window sill. She was unconscious by the time the ground was reached, and was taken to the hospital with her mother.

The cause of the fire is supposed to be the accidental overturning of an oil lamp in the office by the day clerk. The loss is slight. Coroner McHale was on the ground early and left orders for the detention of the day clerk should he be found. His name is Belgoin. He is a Canadian who had been employed but a short time.

Heavy Loss by Fire in Denver.

DENVER, Col., Aug. 16.—A fire which started shortly after noon Monday totally destroyed the Crescent flour mill and elevator at Stanton avenue and Montgomery street. The total loss, including a large quantity of flour in sacks and grain in the elevator, will foot up from $250,000 to $300,000. The insurance is about 75 per cent. of the loss. During the fire Lieut. McLean was terribly injured by an explosion in the dustroom of the mill and may die. F. Sargeant, Chief Pearse's driver, had an arm broken by being forced from the roof by a stream of water from the fire hose.

"Matilda the Fourth" Dead.

FRANKLIN, Pa., Aug. 16.—"Matilda the Fourth," one of the most famous Jersey cows in the world, owned by Congressman Joseph C. Sibley and his partner, Maj. Charles Miller, of this city, died here suddenly Sunday night of milk fever. She had given in one year over 16,000 pounds of milk, which yielded 950 pounds of butter. She was valued at $10,000.

Willing to Take Silver.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 16.—The Southern express office in this city was robbed of a bag containing 1,000 silver dollars Sunday.

Hemmed in by Forest Fires.

BAY CITY, Mich., Aug. 16.—News from Bentley, in the burning district in the northern part of the county, is to the effect that a little daughter of Andrew Newton, of that place, was burned to death, and that thirty men are penned up in a lumber camp, and can get no relief.

Killed by a Horse Kick.

SEDALIA, Mo., Aug. 16.—John May, 20 years old, was kicked over the heart by a horse and died at once. He had gone to the stable for the purpose of saddling the horse preparatory to going to church.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

Killing of Game.

The attorney general has rendered the following opinion regarding the killing of game:

As I construe the provisions of section 5, the killing of game birds is governed by the following regulations:

1st—Woodcock and bertram or upland plover shall not be killed during the following months: November, December, January, February, March April, May and June, but may be killed during the other months of the year.

2d—Prairie chickens or white breasted or sharp tailed grouse shall not be killed during the following months: November, December, January, February, March, April, May, June, July and August, but may be killed during the remaining months of the year.

3d—Quail, partridge, ruffled grouse or pheasant shall not be killed during the months of December, January, February, March, April, May, June, July and August, but may be killed during the other months of the year.

4th—By the inadvertence above suggested, the killing of wild duck, wild geese, brant and snipe is, by the literal terms of the law, prohibited from and after the 1st day of September until the 25th day of April following, and their killing is permitted during the other months of the year. This is so obviously at variance with with the intention of the legislature that I deem it safe to assume that courts, if called upon to construe the said language, will not hold it prohibitive of killing duck, geese, brant and snipe during the months of September, October, November, December, January, February, March and April up to the 25th day thereof.

Whether the law in effect prohibits the killing of aquatic fowl during the entire months of the year is a question of some doubt. Parties who indulge in that sport during the period last named, assume whatever liability the courts may declare to be prescribed therefor by law. H. W. CHILDS,
Attorney General.

The State is Beaten.

All the creditors of insolvent banks have equal rights, although the state may be a depositor, according to the decision of Judges Smith and Pond, of the Hennepin district court. It will be remembered that the state attorney general applied to the court for an order requiring the assignee of the State bank to show cause why he should not pay over to the state treasurer at once the amount of his deposit in the bank. It was claimed that the state was a preferred creditor and was entitled to immediate payment, but the court denies this, and holds that it must recover from the bondsmen of the bank. These can then come in with the other creditors of the bank for the pro rata dividend on the amount of the state's claim paid by them. The State bank suspended July 27, 1893, and had $75,445.76 of state funds on deposit.

Uniform Laws.

There is a national movement to form some sort of a plan to revise the statutes of the various states so that they shall be uniform. The scheme has taken definite shape and a convention is to be held in the Plankinton house, Milwaukee, on Aug. 31. It will be a representative gathering, and the governors of the various states have appointed delegates to attend the convention. Gov. Nelson has announced his selection. He has commissioned Chas. E. Flandrau, of St. Paul; Dean W. S. Pattee, of the university law school; C. E. Chapman, of Fergus Falls; W. W. Billson, of Duluth, and Judge C. M. Start, of Rochester.

News in Brief.

It is not often that the public hears of a state official resigning, but D. L. Kiehle, the state superintendent of public instruction, is about to become the rare exception in official circles. But he is not going to take that step unadvisedly, for he is about to step into a position that suits his tastes and aspirations better—he has been elected to the chair of pedagogy of the State University.

At the risk of her life, Laura Oleson, a 16-year-old girl of Winona, saved her father's horses from a burning barn. She was badly, but not fatally burned.

A complaint has been laid before the state railroad and warehouse commission that revives the old charge of inequitable tariff on wheat and other grains. The complaint comes from Morris, and states that the rates on grain from St. Paul to Duluth, 155 miles, is only 5 cents a hundred, and the rate on grain from Morris to Minneapolis, 147 miles, is 10 cents.

Emil Johnson, of Spring Lake, was fined $10 and costs, amounting in all to $19.15, for spearing a buffalo fish.

The state will be required to carry over about 500,000 pounds of unsold binding twine. The prison factory will continue in operation for the present at least.

The earnings of the state soldiers' home at Minnehaha, growing out of the pensions of the soldier inmates that have been turned over to the state under the rules of the institution, for the quarter ending July 31, amounted to $1,374.

John Duffy, a dock laborer at Duluth, was run over by the cars. He lost his right arm and left leg.

The first threshing of the season was done at Beaver Falls, and the yield was 10 bushels per acre on light sandy soil.

The formal inspection of cattle to comprise the Minnesota stock exhibit at the world's fair has been made by J. J. Furlong, and the following have been selected: 19 head of Shorthorns from H. F. Brown's stock farm; 16 head of Jerseys from O. P. Foster's Plainview farm; 14 head of Devons from Ed Hoppen's farm in Mower county; 15 head of Swiss from Squire's herd at Garden City. The stock entries do not close until Aug. 21, and there are several other herds that may be selected before that time.

Michael Mahoney, living near Austin, hung himself in a granary. He had been insane.

The First National bank of St. James has issued the following notice over the proper signatures: "Owing to the present unsettled condition throughout the business world, we, the directors and stockholders of the First National bank of St. James, hereby absolutely guarantee all deposits now in this bank, and all deposits made during the year 1893, with our private fortunes."

At St. Cloud the proposition to issue $50,000 in bridge bonds to rebuild the St. Germain street bridge was overwhelmingly defeated in a special election. The city will now expend $15,000 on the job.

THE HUMAN SKIN.

Its Great Extent in the Individual—How It Feeds the Nerves and Brain.

The skin is the containant of a man, holds the reins of control over all things within the body, and is a barrier against the reception of injuries from without. He who makes a specialty of dermatology has printed in the parchment of the epidermis every disease that assails the patient, and if he read aright can from that open book clearly tell the progress of the otherwise unseen enemy. There is no more favorable vantage ground for the physician than the ultimate enveloping membrane of the body. Other specialties, as that of the eye, or the ear, the throat, or the stomach, give knowledge of a part of the system, and inferentially of the entire man, but the skin in its deviations from health tells in every minutest particular of the state of the patient. Gently knocking at the very outermost door of the cuticle, or the most external portions of the skin, we enter through one of the pores of which it is estimated one hundred and twenty-five thousand can be covered by one grain of sand. Place over the body of a man of ordinary size grains of sand so that the skin is wholly covered; count now these grains and multiply this by 125,000, and see the enormous stomach through which the nerves obtain their supplies of richest food. These animated pores, constantly drinking the purest constituents of the atmosphere, send these nectars to the cortical cells of the brain as food sufficiently refined to serve the king's table. Within the brain these ambrosial feasts are further examined and formed into nerves. Stupendous process! These pores, situated in the outermost parts of the body, cull from the air the sweetest essences of flowers. The invigorating, invisible soul of the newly-mown grass carries its dainty supplies to the building up of the nerve fiber, and thousands of foods, to show that man lives not by bread alone, are drawn in through these minute pores that have their bed in the insensate cuticle.

Covering the pores are lamellæ, or scales, yielding themselves to every requirement of the parts they serve. The duties imposed upon the scales of the cuticle define their character, and as is the papillary substance beneath, so they are hard or soft, moist or dry, elastic or unyielding. Here, alone, can our vast storehouse of therapeutic appliances find abundant indications for the treatment of any disease within the body. The only portion of the body that in health is devoid of sensation and gives itself absolutely to the duty of serving other parts, affords from its character full information as to the selection of the appropriate remedy. This willing slave is outermost boundary of the deepest atom of the body. It is alpha, of which that is the omega, and all intermediates are photographed upon its plant face. Beneath the cuticle is the rete mucosum. The better to describe the several layers composing the skin, reference will now be made to the papilliary substance, or the cutis, that lies next beneath the rete mucosum. The body of the man is the house he occupies—the skin is the wall of that house. The rough uncovered laths throughout the interior of the house, with insterstices and projecting surfaces, are as the sensitive papillary substances. Over these laths the plaster is applied to give a smooth surface, as the rete is applied over the papillæ. And upon this plaster the highly polished, hard and nonsensitive glazing is made to protect the plaster and the laths beneath, as the cuticle protects the rete. The rete is the portion in which the coloring matter resides, and as is its color so is the color of the cuticle, but beneath this rete all men are alike, white. Hence, too, the pores of the second class arise and empty themselves at the open doors of the scaly cuticle, giving forth vast quantities of Sanctorian perspiration.

The cutis, or papillary substance, is the true skin. Here resides the sense of touch, and here the arteries begin their formation. It is the birthplace of the heart, to which each globule of blood is in the desire to flow as to its own home and place of freedom. The papillæ open and shut with power similar to that of the armature and alternately invite and reject, with the law of action and reaction, the flow of blood. In this cutis is placed the great system of drainage tubes, the sewers of the body through which the internal organs, the membranes of these organs, the muscles and the layers of fat send forth their sweats, their dirt and the grosser portion of the blood. Useless qualities rush out through these canals at times, as in violent exercise of the body in great deluges, carrying in their impetuosity of flow pure essences of nerve fiber, to the destruction of the strength of the man in many diseases. In health the scaly door in the cuticle acts as if double-hinged, and opens inward with the same power of action with which it had previously opened outward. This reciprocal action permits the return to the system of the purest portions of the previously exuded sweat. Here again arises a multitude of indications for the selection of the remedy.—Rufus Choate, M. D., in Southern Journal of Homeopathy.

SOME SANITARY ASPECTS OF BREAD MAKING.

BY CYRUS EDSON, M. D.,
Health Commissioner, New York City.

It is necessary, if one would understand the sanitary aspects of bread making, to fully comprehend the present theory held by scientists of germs and the part played by them in disease. The theory of disease germs is merely the name given to the knowledge had of those germs by medical men, a knowledge which is the result of innumerable experiments. Being this, the old term of a "theory" has become a misnomer. A germ of a disease is a plant, so small that I do not know how to express intelligibly to the general reader its lack of size. When this germ is introduced into the blood or tissues of the body, its action appears to be analogous to that which takes place when yeast is added to dough. It attacks certain elements of the blood or tissues, and destroys them, at the same time producing new substances.

But the germs of the greater part of the germ diseases, that is, of the infectious and contagious diseases, will develop or increase in number without being in the body of a human being, provided always you give them the proper conditions. These conditions are to be found in dough which is being raised with yeast. They are warmth, moisture and the organic matter of the flour on which the germs, after certain changes, feed.

It is necessary to remember at this point that yeast is germ growth, and when introduced into a mixture of glucose or starch, in the presence of warmth and moisture sets up a fermentation. If the mixture be a starchy dough the yeast first changes a portion of the starch into glucose and then decomposes the glucose by changing it into two new substances, viz., carbonic acid gas and alcohol.

Now the gluten, which is also a constituent of dough and moist starch, affords, with the latter, an excellent nidus for the development of germs of disease as well as for the yeast germs. The germs of cholera, as of typhoid fever, would, if introduced into dough, find very favorable conditions for their growth.

I do not wish to "pose" as an alarmist, nor am I willing to say there is very much chance of the germs of typhus and of cholera reaching the stomachs of the people who eat bread which has been raised with yeast. But while I am not afraid that cholera and typhus will be greatly spread by yeast-raised bread, I have not the slightest cause to doubt that other diseases have been and will be carried about in the bread.

I have met journeymen bakers, suffering from cutaneous diseases, working the dough in the bread trough with naked hands and arms. I suppose I need scarcely say this was put a stop to in very short order. I have no reason to suppose bakers are less liable to cutaneous diseases than are other men, and I know, as every housewife knows, yeast-raised bread must be worked a long time. This is an exceedingly objectionable thing from the standpoint of a physician, and for the reasons that the germs of disease which are in the air and dust and on stairways and straps in street cars, are most often collected on the hands. So well do physicians know this that there is no ablution practical equal to that which they undergo before they perform any kind of surgical operation. Any person who has ever kneaded dough understands the way in which the dough cleans the hands. In other words, this means that any germs which may have found a lodging place on the hands of the baker before he makes up his batch of bread are sure to find their way into the dough, and once there, to find all the conditions necessary for subdivision and growth. This is equivalent to saying that we must rely on heat to kill these germs, because it is almost certain that they will be there. Now, underdone or doughy bread is a form which every man and woman has seen.

It is a belief as old as the hills that underdone bread is unhealthful. This reputation has been earned for it by the experience of countless generations, and no careful mother will wish her children to eat bread that has not been thoroughly cooked. The reason given for this recognized unhealthfulness has been that the uncooked yeast dough is very difficult to digest, and this reason has value. No one but a physician would be apt to think of disease germs which have not been killed during the process of baking as a cause of the sickness following the use of uncooked yeast bread. Yet this result from this cause is more than probable. I have not the slightest doubt that could we trace back some of the cases of illness which we meet in our practice we would find that germs collected by the baker have found their way into the yeast bread, that the heat has not been sufficient to destroy them, that the uncooked yeast bread has been eaten and with it the colonies of germs, that they have found their way into the blood and that the call for our services which followed, has rounded off this sequence of events.

I have already pointed out that the germs of disease are to be found in the air and dust. The longer any substance to be eaten is exposed to the air, the greater the chance that germs will be deposited on it. Bread raised with yeast is worked down or kneaded twice before being baked and this process may take anywhere from four hours to ten. It has, then, the chance of collecting disease germs during this process of raising and it has two periods of working down or kneading during each of which it may gather the dirt containing the germs from the baker's hands. As no bread save that raised with yeast, goes through this long process of raising and kneading so no bread save that raised with yeast has so good a chance of gathering germs.

What is meant by "raising" bread is worth a few words. The introduction of the yeast into the moist dough and the addition of heat when the pan is placed near the fire produces an enormous growth of the yeast fungi—the yeast "germ," in other words. These fungi effect a destructive fermentation of a portion of the starchy matter of the flour—one of the most valuable nutrient elements in the flour. The fermentation produces carbonic acid gas, and this, having its origin in every little particle of the starch which is itself everywhere in the flour, pushes aside the particles of the dough to give itself room. This is what is called raising the bread.

It needs but a glance to see that it is, in its effects on the dough, purely mechanical. The dough, which was before a close-grained mass, is now full of little holes, and when cooked in this condition is what we ordinarily call light. This porous quality of bread enables the stomach to rapidly and easily digest it, for the gastric juices quickly soak into and attack it from all sides. The fermentation of the dough, however, uses up a portion of the nutrient elements of the loaf. If it be possible, therefore, to produce a light porous loaf without this destruction and without the "kneading" process, which fills the dough with germs and filth, and without the long period during which the raising process goes on, the gain in food and the gain in the avoidance of the germs is exceedingly plain.

But while we can easily see the dangers which attend the use of yeast it is certain that the vesiculating effect produced by it on the dough is to the last degree perfect. By this I mean that every particle of gluten produces its little bubble of gas and that therefore the bread is properly raised—that is, it is raised everywhere. It is apparent that if we are to substitute any other system of bread making we must have one which will give us, first, mechanical results equally as good, that is, that will produce minute bubbles of carbonic acid gas throughout the mass of dough. Now it is in no way difficult to produce carbonic acid gas chemically, but when we are working at bread we must use such chemicals as are perfectly healthful. Fortunately these are not hard to find.

The evils which attend the yeast-made bread are obviated by the use of a properly made, pure and wholesome baking powder in lieu of yeast. Baking powders are composed of an acid and an alkali which, if properly combined, should when they unite at once destroy themselves and produce carbonic acid gas. A good baking powder does its work while the loaf is in the oven, and having done it, disappears.

But care is imperative in selecting the brand of baking powder to be certain that it is composed of non-injurious chemicals. Powders containing alum or those which are compounded from impure ingredients, or those which are not combined in proper proportion or carefully mixed and which will leave either an acid or an alkali in the bread, must not be used.

It is well to sound a note of warning in this direction or the change from the objectionable yeast to an impure baking powder will be a case of jumping from the frying pan into the fire.

The best baking powder made is, as shown by analysis, the "Royal." It contains absolutely nothing but cream of tartar and soda, refined to a chemical purity, which when combined under the influence of heat and moisture produce carbonic acid gas, and having done this, disappear. Its leavening strength has been found superior to other baking powders, and as far as I know, it is the only powder which will raise large bread perfectly. Its use avoids the long period during which the yeast made dough must stand in order that the starch may ferment and there is also no kneading necessary.

The two materials used in the Royal, cream of tartar and soda, are perfectly harmless even when eaten. But they are combined in exact compensating weights, so that when chemical action begins between them they practically disappear, the substance of both having been taken up to form the carbonic acid gas. More than this, the proper method of using the powder insures the most thorough mixing with the flour. The proper quantity being taken, it is mixed with the flour and stirred around in it. The mixture is then sifted several times and this insures that in every part of the flour there shall be a few particles of the powder. The salt and milk or water being added, the dough is made up as quickly as possible and moulded into the loaves.

These are placed in the oven and baked. But the very moment the warmth and moisture attack the mixture of cream of tartar and soda, these two ingredients chemically combine and carbonic acid or leavening gas is evolved. The consequence may be seen at a glance, the bread is raised during the time it is baking in the oven, and this is the most perfect of all conceivable methods of raising it.

Here, then, there is no chance for germs of disease to get into the dough and thence into the stomach, more than that the bread is necessarily as sweet as possible, there having been no time during which it could sour. This involves the fact that the bread so made will keep longer, as it is less likely to be contaminated by the germs that affect the souring process.

It will be strange if the crowds of visitors to the world's fair do not greatly increase the number of contagious disease, which we will have to treat. Under these circumstances is it not folly of follies to open a single channel through which these germs may reach us? is it not the part of wisdom to watch with the greatest care all that we eat and drink, and to see that none but the safest and best methods are employed in the preparation of our food? To me it seems as though there could be but one answer to questions like these.

I have shown the danger of using the yeast raised bread, and with this I have shown how that danger may be avoided. The ounce of prevention which in this case is neither difficult nor expensive is certainly worth many pounds of cure, and the best thing about it is that it may be relied on almost absolutely. Those who during the coming summer eat bread or biscuits or rolls made at home with Royal baking powder may be sure they have absolutely stopped one channel through which disease may reach them.

NOTE.—Housekeepers desiring information in regard to the preparation of the bread which Dr. Edson for sanitary reasons so strongly urges for general use, should write to the Royal Baking Powder Company, New York.

Katydids Rub Their Shoulder Blades and Grasshoppers Strike Their Wings.

Everybody is familiar with the music of the katydid. Here, again, says the Washington Star, it is the male that has the voice. At the base of each wing cover is a thin membraneous plate. He elevates the wing covers and rubs the two plates together. If you could rub your shoulder blades together you could imitate the operation very nicely.

Certain grasshoppers make a sound when flying that is like a watchman's rattle—clackety-clack, very rapidly repeated. There are also some moths and butterflies which have voices. The "death's head" moth makes a noise when frightened that strikingly resembles the crying of a young baby. How it is produced is not known, though volumes have been written on the subject. The "mourning cloak" butterfly—a dark species with a light border in its wings—makes a cry of alarm by rubbing its wings together.

The katydids, crickets, grasshoppers and other musical insects are all exaggerated in the tropics, assuming giant forms. Thus their cries are proportionately louder. There is an East Indian cicada which makes a remarkably loud noise. It is called by the natives "dundub," which means drum. From this name comes that of the genus, which is known as dundubia. This is one of the few scientific terms derived from the Sanskrit.

The "deathwatch" is a popular name applied to certain beetles which bore into the walls and floors of old houses. They make a ticking sound by standing on their hind legs and knocking their heads against the wood quickly and forcibly. It is a sexual call. Many superstitions have been entertained respecting the noise produced by these insects, which is sometimes imagined to be a warning of death.

Entomologists have succeeded in recording the cries of many insects by the ordinary system of musical notation. But this method does not show the actual pitch, which is usually several octaves above the staff. It merely serves to express the musical intervals. It is known with reasonable certainty that many insects have voices so highly pitched that they cannot be heard by the human ear. One evidence of this fact is that some people can distinguish cries of insects which are not audible to others.

He Had Seen the Scarecrow.

One Somerville young man, who has just been spending a fortnight in the country, lost all chance of making a favorable impression on the farmer's pretty daughter the very first day he came. Her father came by the front of the house where the young man was trying to make himself agreeable, and the girl introduced him, saying:

"This is my father, Mr. Smythe."

"Oh, yes," responded the young man, turning toward the old man, and slowly holding out his hand, "I saw you standing over in the cornfield a little while ago, when I came up the road."—Somerville Journal

THE END.

The course of the weariest river
Ends in the great gray sea;
The acorn, forever and ever,
Strives upward to the tree.
The rainbow, the sky adorning,
Shines promise through the storm;
The glimmer of the coming morning
Through midnight gloom would form.
By time all knots are riven,
Complex although they be,
And peace will at last be given,
Dear, both to you and to me.

Then, though the part may be dreary,
Look onward to the goal.
Though the heart and the head be weary,
Let faith inspire the soul:
Seek the right, though the wrong be tempting
Speak the truth at any cost;
Vain is all weak exempting
When once the gem is lost.
Let strong hand and keen eye be ready
For plain and ambushed foes;
Though earnest, and fancy steady
Bear best unto the close.

The heavy clouds may be raining,
But with evening comes the light,
Though the dark, low winds are complaining.
Yet the sunlight gilds the height;
And love has his hidden treasure
For the patient and the pure:
And time gives his fullest measure
To the workers who endure:
And the word that no law has shaken
Has the future pledge supplied;
For we know that when we "awaken"
We shall be "satisfied."

—Tinsley's Magazine.

THE little ranch looked solitary enough, set by itself on the great level prairie. Somehow, its isolation struck the rider approaching it with a new sense of the loneliness of these western wilds. He was a young man, with a sunbrowned face, light brown beard, and long wavy hair of the same color, tangled by the rising breeze into a wavy, picturesque confusion under the shade of his broad-brimmed, gray felt hat. The rest of his costume—a gray belted jacket and breeches, with the revolver at his belt—gave him a sort of guerrilla aspect far from unbecoming. But his features were unmistakably English, and the clear brown eyes looked honest and kindly notwithstanding their somewhat despondent expression, and some traces of a "hard life."

Ned Carew, in short, was a type of many a young Englishman driven into the perilous influences of a wild, rough life, partly through his own fault, partly through that of others. Just then he was undergoing one of those occasional "spells" of homesickness, generally associated with such days of enervating heat, when the great plain seemed to pant, almost breathless, under the sun's untempered glare.

As he drew near the ranch for which he was bound, his eye was caught by a sight unseen for years—that of a graceful figure in an English riding habit—a sight associated with some of the pleasantest and most painful memories of his life. The lady sat her horse well, as he could see at a glance. Who could she be? On the former occasion when he had visited the ranch, on business with its inmates, these were two young men, living in a rough bachelor way. He had not heard of the marriage of either, and he had not dreamed of meeting a lady now. As he watched her ride up to the door his glance strayed critically over his dusty attire. He even thought of turning away to seek the nearest village. But curiosity prevailed over this new-born shyness.

As he fastened his horse near the house, his quick eye noticed that a handsome elderly lady, who sat at an open window knitting, turned to call to some one within. At the open door he was met by a tall girl, whom he recognized at once as a lady, despite the linen apron which completely enveloped her dress, and the partially rolled-up sleeves which betokened some household occupation. She had a dignified bearing, a finely-proportioned figure in which he thought he recognized that of the fair rider, nobly molded features, with the combination of dark hair and soft blue eyes which suggested an Irish type of beauty. With a clear complexion, slightly flushed with exercise, Ned Carew thought she looked like a princess in disguise.

Notwithstanding his present rough life and associations, Ned Carew had not lost the instinctive bearing of an English gentleman; and this the young lady seemed in her turn to recognize as she explained that her brother, Mr. Percival, was out on the prairie, but would soon return, while his former comrade had left the ranch some time before. As she spoke, she courteously showed the way into a little sitting-room, which with its simple extemporized furniture, had so homelike and refined an air that Carew's Heimweh was intensified; and he surveyed the little feminine adornments, the water-color sketches, the books, and (last but not least) the elderly lady who gave him so kind a greeting, with the relish of a man whose domestic instincts had gone through a long course of starvation. Miss Percival, leaving her mother to talk to the stranger, quietly went on with her preparations for the evening meal, in the course of which she flitted in and out, setting the tea-table in a dainty way in which he had not seen a table set for years. And though the crockery was of the plainest, the fine white table-cloth and the gracefully arranged wild flowers would have set off a less appetizing meal than that prepared by Miss Percival's deft fingers.

Very soon young Percival appeared, with a hearty welcome—for, in these solitudes, a new acquaintance speedily becomes a friend. Carew gladly accepted his host's invitation to go to his room, and explained his business while getting rid of the dust of his ride. When he returned he looked more like his own self than he had done for months; his forehead—the shaggy locks brushed out of the way—leaving its English fairness to contrast with the embrowned shade below, and his whole appearance more in keeping with his mellow English voice and gentlemanly bearing.

Miss Percival had laid aside her apron and appeared in a plain but very becoming dark blue dress of some thin material set off with a dainty little collar that might have come fresh from Regent street. Seated at the hospitable tea-table, Carew soon found his unusual shyness disappearing under the influence of the ladies' gentle courtesy, till it seemed as if some baleful spell had been suddenly broken, and he could think and talk more like his old self of happier days.

When they rose from the table Carew strolled over to the book shelves where, among a few favorite books, were a volume of Sophocles and one or two of Percival's old college classics. Almost mechanically, he took one down and opened it with the sense of greeting an old acquaintance; and Percival and he were soon discussing Oxford professors and dons of the college days in which they had been so nearly contemporaries. Then the two young men concluded their business while the ladies were busy about their household duties. But, as Carew had of course been invited to stay all night, the whole party were by and by assembled outside the open door to enjoy the coolness of the evening as the dusk dropped softly over the boundless prairie, and the evening star gleamed brightly out in crystal purity as the sunset light died away above the unbroken horizon.

They sat long talking, chiefly of "home" scenes; and even after Mrs. Percival had gone in to rest, accompanied by her son, Carew still lingered, loth to terminate his conversation with Miss Percival, and unable to resist the spell of this sympathetic female companionship, now so strange in his life. Under the influence of it, and in the friendly obscurity of the twilight, he talked as he would not have believed possible an hour or two before. His companion could read between his words something of his present self-disgust and self-despair. On the other hand, the whole tone of her conversation struck a long-silent chord in his heart, reviving crushed aspirations, and suggesting an unseen strength in which a man may fight a good fight against fate, even when everything seems against him.

As he lay awake that night, the best and holiest influences of his early life seemed to have sprung into renewed life under the impression made by one woman's face and gentle words, and in many a lonely hour on the prairie thereafter he mentally associated Stella Percival—partly from the suggestion of her name—with the bright, pure stars they had watched as they talked that evening, and got into a way of thinking of her as the "Lone Star of the Prairie."

But when he next found a reason for passing that way, the little ranch was deserted, and the inmates, he was told, had sold out and gone to live in Canada. So the "Lone Star" had set on the prairie, and he must henceforth look to that lode-star of life of which Miss Percival had spoken with such earnest feeling.

Some two or three years later, Carew was sitting in the cozy library of an English vicarage, talking to a fair young matron. His carefully trimmed hair and beard and strictly conventional attire somewhat altered his appearance, but his expression was still more changed from the dreary despondency written on the face of the wanderer of the prairie.

"Yes, it is odd," he said, "that I should ever have lived to succeed my poor Cousin Dick—with all his home comforts! For you haven't the faintest idea of the life of a cowboy on the prairie! I was very near going under; but I had an experience that pulled me up short. It was only an hour's talk with a young lady I met accidentally. You know, I never thought I could believe in a woman again; but this one made me believe, not only in her but in myself too; and that saved me!"

"Your poor boy!" exclaimed his sister. "But we must hurry now, or we shall be late at Mrs. Beaumont's, and she won't forgive me. For you are a sort of star here, now, you know. Come; you needn't look so dismal over it! I dare say you may find some nice people there. And she has two ladies visiting her who have lived in the west, I believe; so you may find lots to talk about."

An "afternoon tea" is apt to be a tame affair to a man fresh from the prairies, and Carew was looking—and feeling—rather bored when he suddenly caught sight of a figure and face that made him start with amazement.

THEY SAT TALKING OF HOME.

No! his eyes did not deceive him! That surely was Miss Percival! And there, only a little way off, was the handsome old lady of the ranch! Excusing himself rather abruptly to the lady with whom he was conversing, he made his way across the room to Miss Percival, who never saw him till he spoke—in a voice somewhat unsteady from emotion. There was a moment's look of perplexed surprise, and then a frank expression of unaffected pleasure. Then followed an eager interchange of question and answer, during which their hostess approached, and, addressing the young man as "Sir Edward Carew," asked him to "take Miss Percival in to have some tea." And "Sir Edward" could hardly help laughing at the expression of consternation that came over Miss Percival's expressive face, though he was hardly prepared for the almost freezing dignity that suddenly stiffened her manner. He did not know that she had heard the young baronet talked of on all sides as a "great catch" till the disgust thereby awakened made her now feel mortified at the involuntary cordiality with which she had met this "eligible parti," who, after all, had been the merest acquaintance.

But Sir Edward Carew would have been less of a man than he was if he had not found ways and means of overcoming this slight impediment to "the course of true love." And so it came about, before very long, that the "Lone Star of the Prairie" became the light of his English home.

SHE REALLY WAS HONEST.

And She Thought Everything in the Car Was Looking at Her.

A motherly-looking old lady got on a State street car at the corner of Chicago avenue, the other afternoon. She was plainly dressed in black, her hair was as white as snow, and her face was sweet and pleasant. She walked half way up the car and found a seat.

As soon as she was seated she fumbled in a black silk bag that she carried on her arm and produced a nickel. This she held in her hand waiting for the conductor to come along.

The car was well filled and the conductor had plenty to do. He came through the car at Chestnut street and hurriedly collected the fares. He skipped the old lady. She was ready to pay him the nickel, but she did not offer it to him when he passed. After he had gone by her conscience reproached her evidently, for she half held out her hand as if to urge the fare on the conductor. The conductor didn't notice the half-proffered fare. Then began a mighty struggle between the sordid and the Christian sides of the woman's character. She knew that she ought to give the money to the conductor, but then she doubtless argued to herself that it was his business to ask for it. She felt that every person in the car knew that she had held out her fare, and she looked around with a defiant air as much as to say: "Well, what if I did?"

Her look of defiance didn't last long, however. She smiled weakly and dropped her eyes to the floor. She started to hold out her hand and then pulled her arm back. She looked around the car again, and this time she blushed. Then she sat bolt upright, evidently having come to an understanding with herself, and dropped the nickel into the black silk bag. It looked very much as if the sordid side had won.

The conductor came through again. The old lady looked straight ahead. Her lips were closely compressed. Her fingers twitched a bit when the conductor said "Fare, please," but she did not fish up the nickel. She glanced at her neighbors out of the corners of her eyes after the conductor had passed. It was evident that she was not yet fully decided that she had done right.

As the car turned through Division street she looked around again. She probably caught some one's eye, for she blushed scarlet. Her defiant look was gone. She was embarrassed. She felt that everybody in the car was watching her. She reached down into the black bag and found the nickel. Then she beckoned to the conductor and handed it to him. "You skipped me, I guess," she said simply. The conductor was astonished, but he took the money and thanked her. And the old lady settled back in her seat, her face radiant with a look that plainly showed that she was at peace with her conscience after a very trying quarter of an hour.—Chicago Times.

The Opinion of a Prominent Foreign Journalist About It.

CHICAGO, Ill., July 24, 1893.—W. J. C. Kenyon, Esq., Gen. Pass. Agent, C. B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.—Dear Sir: Allow me to compliment your company through these lines for the perfect comfort, the beautiful scenery, the smoothness of its roadbed and the great speed, which make traveling on your lines a pleasure of the highest order.

I have travelled a good deal for the last year, both in Europe and America, but I do not know that I have ever enjoyed a trip on a railroad more than a recent trip from Minneapolis to LaCrosse.

The scenery along the great Father of Waters is such a magnificent and such a varied one, that one forgets it late or never. The reclining chairs and the well equipped cars are all of the best that I ever met with. The usual smoke, dust and dirt, which make traveling a hardship on most roads, are entirely absent on yours. I remain, yours very truly, DR. FRED. VOSS MOHN,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime, and read the Label.

The Attorney General thinks a bridge and a road are two things, and that the voters of Wright county will have to vote on whether or not they will pay $2000 of the appropriation made by the county commissioners.

"For instance there were a good many people who last fall predicted disaster to the country if the democratic cause was triumphant, but they are not what are commonly called 'calamity shriekers' because their predictions were based on common sense and have been fully justified by results."—Sherburne County Star-News.

When ever a Democrat intimated that the McKinley tariff would aid in making hard times such papers as the Star-News jumped on to him at once as a "calamity shrieker" or when any one dared say that the finances of the country were not what they should be he was put in the same class by the Wright County Times, Sherburne County Star-News and others. Now the McKinley bill, with its 25 cents per bushel on wheat, and the John Sherman Silver compromise bill are both in full force and nobody can "calamity shriek" worse than the Times and Star-News.

Julius Hardt, of Maple Plain, Made a Scape-Goat to Bear the Odium of Supt. Lewis' Nefarious Act.

Julius Hardt, of Maple Plain, who has always borne a high reputation for honor and principle, is being made a scape-goat to bear the odium of Supt. Lewis' unjust action in revoking my certificate.

The superintendent, failing utterly in his diabolical attempt to bring me into disrepute, and lacking the moral courage to face the storm of public indignation following swiftly in the wake of his nefarious act, by one stroke of his evil genious, is endeavoring to change the course of the devastating cyclone of public condemnation that threatens him with political ruin and social ostracism, in the direction of the sage of Maple Plain. Wherever I go now-a-days I am asked about 'that mad Hardt.'

Lewis, to shield himself, is crying it out that he in revoking my certificate, acted upon the complaint of Mr. Hardt. Hardt is thus left in a position to be looked upon as a very dishonorable man. He (Hardt) gave me a letter of recommendation, after the certificate was revoked, in which he certified that I had been a member of his family as a boarder for nine months; that he had found me to be an "upright honorable young man in every particular;' that not the slightest complaint had ever been entered against me by any patron of the Maple Plain school, and that I was not found wanting in education.

All this appeared over Mr. Hardt's signature as secretary of the school board in the letter here referred to and which was published at the time and read by hundreds and thousands of people in Hennepin county and elsewhere. The Superintendent is now endeavoring to make the public believe that Mr. Hardt, while I was a boarder in his family and giving general satisfaction as a teacher, was, behind my back, journeying to Minneapolis to enter complaint against me and urging the revocation of my certificate, just for the sake of making trouble.

Now if this were true, a teacher would not board at the Star Hotel again in a thousand years if the present proprietor remained in charge. But I wish to state to the public that I have had an opportunity to observe the daily life of Mr. Hardt for a long time, and I know, that the superintendent is simply trying to shift the responsibility of a dishonorable act that he, and he alone is to blame for, onto a worthy citizen and I shall not stand by in silence and see that done

There is no one at Maple Plain at whose hands I did not receive the very kindest treatment throughout the entire year, notwithstanding the fact that that village was, perhaps, the greatest Shaver stronghold in Hennepin county. WILLIAM KENNEDY.

Free Text Books.

The Board of Education here have determined to assess damages against the pupils for all injuries to books received last term, and demand a settlement in full for damages from each pupil before allowing them any books, for next term. This is opening the door for a "pay" school instead of a "free" school. It would be as reasonable to demand pay for the chalk, or stationery, used last term. Besides it is in direct violation of the state laws on the subject. The board has no shadow of authority for collecting damages in any such way.

Mgr. Satolli's Impressions.

The Papal Allegate made an official trip to the Pacific Coast in July via the Great Northern Railway, visiting Great Falls, Helena, Butte, Spokane, Everett and Seattle. On his return to St. Paul he expressed much pleasure with the appointments of the passenger service on that new transcontinental route, noting specially the comforts of the Buffet car, with its library, magazines, smoking rooms, writing tables, easy chairs, bath room, barber shop and observation windows, run in connection with Palace Dining and Sleeping cars, and spoke eloquently of the grand scenery in the Rocky and Caskade mountains.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

THE BUG ON THE MUG.

A cockroach sat on a paste pot's brim,
And a wise old bug was he;
With pensive mien I regarded him
While he did the same by me:
And this he said
As he shook his head
In a sympathetic way:
"A man will slave,
Till he finds his grave,
For the sake of fame or pay.

"A cockroach is but a rambling bug,
With a homely coat of brown,"
Quoth he again from the well filled mug,
And he heeded not my frown;
"But bugs are wise,
As the moment flies,
For they let Care go his way,
While man will slave,
Till he finds his grave,
For the sake of fame or pay."

"We marvel much at the weary man
Who will let life go to waste,
The while a cockroach views life's plan
From a pot of toothsome paste;
But bugs are wise
As the moment flies,
For they know the better way,
While man will slave,
Till he finds his grave,
For the sake of fame or pay."

Then up I rose and I smote that bug
With a three line paragraph,
And down he fell from his well filled mug:
But he heeded not my laugh;
For this he said
As he shook his head
In a sad and solemn way;
"A man will slave
Till he finds his grave,
For the sake of fame or pay,"
—Franklin W. Lee.

JOHN SHERMAN goes back on his Silver bill. Didn't he do the same with Liza Pinkerton a few years ago? We expect he would like to forget many other things along with them.

THE State binding twine factory at the State prison, Stillwater, seems to be laboring under a case of over production so soon. Five hundred thousand pounds too much for this season.

PROF. W. W. PENDERGAST, of Hutchinson, has been appointed State Superintendent of Public instruction instead of Prof. Kiehl, resigned. We have heard of no complaint on account of the change.

SOME of the Democrats are looking a little askance at the actions of Grover Cleveland, while Republicans are praising him to the skies. Just hold on the President evidently knows what he's about, and as fast as opportunity presents itself will let the rest of the folks into the secret of steering the greatest government on the globe safely through a perilous situation.

IOWA Democrats have re-nominated Gov. Boies., and the Republicans have put up Mr. Jackson, of Des Moines. Both parties have neglected to throw out any bait to the Prohibitionists. The Republicans saying in their platform that Prohibition will be no test for republicanism, while the democrats say we favor each legislation as will permit the manufacture of spiritous and vinous liquors within the state, thereby giving to our people at least equal rights in this respect with the manufacturers of other states. If by other states they mean Minnesota of course this means a license law.

OUR Republican friends just now are climbing into Grover Cleveland's band wagon to beat all. They claim he has run away from his party. That he is the one man excellent. That the Republican Congressmen and Senators are exceedingly anxious to cast their votes in accordance with his recommendation to repeal the obnoxious purchasing clause of the John Sherman silver bill. What else could they do now if they wanted to that would count for anything? Arn't the democrats in the majority? And haven't they always favored, and do they not now favor good sound gold and silver dollars?

OHIO Republicans are green enough to put un Wm. McKinley, Jr., again and try to elect him Governor, on the protective tariff issue, and then hoist him onto the country as a presidential candidate at the first opportunity. It is of no use to try that dodge. It won't work. You may succeed in getting him into the Gubernational chair but he is not destined to fill old Grovers shoes. Why James G. Blain said years ago that "this campaign settles the tariff issue for this generation," and it went against protection that year, and has been going against it worse and worse ever since. Won't them Ohio fellers ever learn anything but to have the wool pulled over their eyes year after year.

AN important court decission has lately been rendered that where farmers have wheat in the elevators they are the owners, as against mortgages given by the elevators to other parties. This is correct.

FROM September 11th to 27th there will be held in Chicago one of the grandest Religious Congresses ever known. All sects and creeds have been invited to have representatives toere to take part in the proceedings. it is expected all will improve their opportunities. This is an excellent chance for God fearing people to come nearer together, to smooth up many of the minor points of difference and become more harmonious in their race for the same goal. Let the meeting result in good to the world.

IT makes people tired to see week after week in leading Republican papers, that this or that "ex-rebel" has been appointed to some position of honor, trust, or profit, at the hands of this administration. If the Republican party intended to everlastingly call people living below Mason and Dixon's line rebels, or ex-rebels to the third and forth generation, why didn't they use them as such when they had a chance? Why didn't they hang every one they could catch, to the first tree they could reach? Why did they reconstruct things and take them all back as brothers, and give Guerilla Mosby and General Longstreet and others good fat positions at the public crib? And after they had in their magnanimity done these things. Why don't they keep their mouths shut when other people do the same thing? Is this the way to court peace and brotherly love among the citizens of our country?

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 21.—Ex-Congressman Niedringhaus said to-day that the repairs on his tin plate and stamping works would be completed this week and the works would start up early nevt week. The works give employment to 2,000 hands. They have been closed for two months.—Pioneer Press.

The Ex-Congressman, we believe is the man who used borax in his business, and, although favoring the McKinley bill wanted it on the free list as it made several thousand dollars difference to him in a year. It may be that he will succeed in making enough of the little tin plates, like Buckley's, to supply the patriotic remains of the g. o. p. in Ohio for the falls campaign after which, altogether likely the works will again take a rest, while the country continues to purchase her tinware of Welsh people, who gladly exchange it for things we have and are equally as glad to find a market for as they are for their tin.

THE St. Peter Herald and Tribune are having a tilt over "Tin Plate Liers." The Tribune took occasion to remark that the new block being built by Dick & Walter would be roofed with "American Tin." The Herald editor, last week published a letter from Merchant & Co., Chicago, the firm that furnished the tin for roofing the building in question, which completely annihilates the Tribune's story except where they hide behind the statement that "the Secretary of the Treasury has ruled that plates so made are American and should go under that category when taking figures concerning the production. The firm claim that no black steel sheets thin enough are made in this country for their purposes, but that they are imported from Wales, and also foreign pig tin is largely bought because the home supply is insufficient. The pig led is bought in this country. The firm at first would not claim that this was "American Tin" until the decission above mentioned by the Secretary of the Treasury. Mr. Johnson has broke the record in proving who are "tin plate liers."

IN CLOSING one of his panegyrics on President Cleveland's late message to Congress, Ignatius Donnelly in the Representative says: "And Cleveland says, 'wipe out silver,' England demands it. The Rothschilds insist upon it. What is the country? Nothing. What is the money power? Everything. Drive Christ out of the temple and instal the money changers! Down with the human race! Up with plutocracy!

And this is democratic statesmanship! And republican statesmanship says, 'let us hold up Grover's hands. Party lines have disappeared.' And the abject wretches live in America and obey Europe."

We are of opinion that I. D. will have as hard a time proving the above assertions and inuendoes to the satisfaction of the American people as he has had trying to make the English believe that Bacon wrote Shakespeare's works, and with no more success. Old Grover has a record as a democrat. I. D. has tried about all the parties that have been in existence since he lived in this country. People have a great deal more faith in G. C. than they have in I. D.

SENATOR VOORHEES, of Indiana, delivered an able speech in the Senate on Tuesday. He favors the repeal of the Sherman purchasing clause and bi-metalism. He appears to take a clear Democratic view of the situation and is willing to trust President Cleveland and Secretary Carlisle to discharge the obligations assumed by them in an honest and upright manner, and to give the country what Democrats have always claimed the country should have, gold and silver coins, good for 100 cents on the dollar any where. He also favors State banks in preference to the expensive National banks under the control of monopolies. He also advocated a carefully adjusted and graded income tax—for revenue purposes. In conclusion, Mr. Vorhees said: "And now, in the meantime, and in view of the present crisis, full of peril as it is, let the whole people of the United States, of every commonwealth and of every neighborhood, cast out their fears and abide in an unshaken faith that the present disasters will pass away and be followed, as soon as much needed reforms can be accomplished, by the unbroken sunlight of prosperity, and that He who determins the destiny of nations will cause the republic of their fashers to win and not to lose in the transcendant mission to which it was dedicated a hundred years ago."

The Outlook.

For several weeks a financial depression has been felt in our country. People have, many of them have not the faintest idea why, become distrustful of everybody else. They have been on the look out for a big financial crash. They have expected people to be out of money. They have hoarded all they could get. Have sacrificed interest to obtain the principal. Have salted it it down for safe keeping. Thousands of people have paid up debts they would have paid interest on for years, had not they been pressed for payment. The people of this country probably have their debts as nearly paid now as at any time for ten years or more. They have been refused credit. They have learned that by a little self sacrifice, and economy they can live cheaper than they thought they could. That they could sell more small products of the farm than they had supposed. They have been taught a thorough lesson in economics, and have learned it well. They feel more independent than ever. They have found they can live as well on what they have as on what they can get trusted for. That a cash system of doing business is the cheapest and most satisfactory to all parties concerned, That it is unnecessary, and unwise to pay interest on other people's money when it can be got along without. It will take a long time for them to forget this valuable lesson, and we predict moneyed individuals will be anxious to loan money at a much lower rate of interest than they have for years, within another twelve months, and find fewer takers.

Wanted:—A Billy Goat.

The other night a billy goat walked into the town hall at Beatrice, Neb., and ate all the city records. The Beatrice authorities are now puzzled to know how to get at oll the inside facts in the case. —Chicago Dispatch.

We are going to send to Beatrice and buy that billy-goat, and set him to work eating up the farm-mortgages of Minnesota! Lord! What a demand there would be for that billy-goat. How the farmers who voted for Harrison and Cleveland last fall would roll and tumble in the mud to get hold of Billy! The troops from one county would give battle to the troops from another county—all about billy! And the rewards! Five thousand dollars for the billy-goat for twenty-four hours!! Bring on your Billy! Bring on your Billy!—I. D in the Representative.

It would look better if the Sage of Niniger would advise the farmers to pay their mortgages and quit mortgagging than to have the billy-goat from Beatrice eat them up.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 18, 1893.

Senator Voorhees tumbled down a good many immaginary structures when he asked and obtained the consent of the Senate for the Finance committee to hold daily meetings while the Senate is in session, in order to consider and report a financial bill. A number of industrious liers have been working double time to create the impression that Senator Voorhees and the other democratic members of this committee were purposely delaying the the consideration by the committee of financial bills that have been introduced. The facts speak for themselves and need no comment.

The Senate is now considering the bill favorably reported by the Finance committee and endorsed by Secretary Carlisle, authorizing National banks to issue currency to the full amount of bonds they have deposited to secure the same. Senator Cockrell has proposed several amendments to the bill, because of his belief that the National banks already enjoy too many privileges. But inasmuch as the country is greatly in need of the additional currency which would at once be put in circulation were the bill a law there is little doubt that it will be passed without material amendment.

The House has another week of silver debate ahead of it before the voting begins. The unconditional repeal men appear to grow more confident of the result, although they admit that if the rumor which is current, that forty or fiftv of the republicans have agreed to vote with the silver men fer the amendment providing for the free coinage of silyer at a ratio of 20 to 1, shall prove to be true they will be defeated and the amendment adopted. That rumor, however, appears to have a very slender foundation, as Representative Bland, the silver leader, says he knows nothing about any such arrangement and does not believe that tt exists, and ex-Speaker Reed says the republicans of the House, with less than twenty exceptions, will vote for unconditional repeal.

Members of the administration were not surprised at the result of the Behring Sea arbitration, hints of the probable outcome having been received in advance of the decision. Nor are they disappointed, as the United States comes out of it quite as well as they expected. The fact is that the present administration has never enthused over this particular arbitration, and had it not found the whole business arranged for when it assumed office something would have been done in accordance with its own ideas. The decision will, of course, be accepted by this government as final, and advices from London bring the same assurance from the British government, so that the long and troublesome dispute may be considered as at an end, and the advantages gained by the arbitration as about six points in favor of Great Britain to four in favor of the United States. A Congressman speaking of the matter said: "It seems to me that the rich seal ring gets more out of the arbitration than either the United States or Great Britain, as the prohibition of fire-arms in sealing gives that ring a stronger hold than ever upon the business. The only people who still use the spear in sealing are the native Alaskans who are in the employ of the seal ring, so you can imagine what the prohibition of fire-arms means to the ring."

Representative Grosvenor, of Ohio, appears to be in a bad way. He claimed in a speech made in the House this week that President Cleveland's message to Congress was an appeal to partisanship. Many things have been said about the message, but so far Grosvenor is the only man who has been able to see partisanship in it. During the Harrison administration Grosvenor had to be sent to Europe to keep him out of mischief, and it is great pity that he cannot now be sent somewhere to remain until the financial question is disposed of.

Senator Hill this week introduced a bill for the repeal of the Federal election laws. It is short and to the point and will in due time be passed.

Speaker Crisp says, and there is certainly no better authority, that all the talk about this or that man for the chairmanship of this or that important House committee is pure guesswork. He has not made up his own mind, consequently it would be an impossibility for anybody to say what he intends doing. As soon as he gets the members satisfactorially assigned the committees will be announced.

It has been stated here this week that President Cleveland was unalterably opposed to any compromise desired Congress to either unconditionally repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman law or to let it alone. Your correspondent vainly endeavored to find a democratic Senator or Representative who had personal knowledge that such are Mr. Cleveland's sentiments. That he would prefer unconditional repeal is certain; but that he would veto conditional repeal I do not believe.

THE record of embezzlements in the United States thus far in the current year is a significant one, the total for the seven months being $6,373,140. INSTEAD of opening at nine and closing at five the government bureau of engraving and printing now opens at eight and closes at six, giving two hours' extra work a day. This was made necessary by the demand for national bank notes. The capacity of the department is now 40,000 sheets, or 160,000 notes, a day. The average value of notes is a little more than $8, making the value of the daily output, exclusive of reissue, $1,250,000 a day. The increase in national bank notes is due to the low price of government bonds, which the banks are buying and to that extent increasing their issues.

NEW LINCOLN STATUE.

Memorial to Scottish-American Soldiers of the Civil War Unveiled at Edinburgh.

EDINBURGH, Aug. 23.—The statue of Abraham Lincoln, erected as a memorial to the Scottish-American soldiers of the American civil war, was unveiled here Monday in the presence of the municipal authorities, many distinguished guests, a number of Americans and a large crowd of residents of Edinburgh, including most of the elite of the town and people from the surrounding country. The statue, which is of bronze, stands upon a base of polished red granite. Upon the surbase sits a freed slave in bronze, his face upturned to Lincoln, who holds in his right hand the emancipation proclamation. Several battle flags also in bronze lie beneath the outstretched left hand of the slave. The monument is erected in the cemetery set apart for the burial of Scottish-American soldiers, a handsome plot of ground in Calton Hill cemetery which was given for the purpose by the town council. Sir William Arrol, the builder of the great Forth bridge, presided, and Consul at Edinburgh Wallace Bruce, the "Poet of the Hudson," delivered the oration.

FEATHERED HIS NEST.

E. M. Donaldson Loots Many Banks in Kansas, Missouri and Iowa and Flees to Mexico with About $800,000 in Ill-Gotten Gains.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 23.—From school-teacher to Napoleon of finance and thence to a defaulter is the story of E. M. Donaldson, late of this city, secretary and manager of the Union Trust company of Sioux City, Ia., president of the First national bank of Marion, Kan., and of eleven Iowa banks, who fled Tuesday, presumably to Mexico, and left behind him a record as an artistic looter of banks that is seldom surpassed All of the institutions he was connected with are in receivers hands. He is supposed to have taken with him about $800,000 of other people's money. From the Union Trust company alone he took $600,000. From the Kansas and Iowa banks $200,000 is a conservative estimate of his stealings. Forgery is one of the many charges against him, and a deputy marshal is now on his trail in Mexico armed with a warrant for his arrest for erasing his indorsement to a note for $5,000.

Donaldson's story is unique. It begins in 1885 when he left school teaching to go into the real estate business in Marion, Kan. Associating himself with prominent men of the city he was soon coining money for them, as Kansas was then in the height of its boom. Eastern people became interested with him, notably Joseph L. Hosmer, of Suncook, N. H., who established a branch office in New Hampshire and began placing loans with New England people for them. In 1887 Donaldson organized the Union Trust & Mortgage company of Marion, Kan., with a capital of $150,000, which began business successfully. Up to this time Donaldson was honest and successful, and his marked abilities and smooth tongue carried everything before him, but the bottom began to drop out of the Kansas boom and that started his troubles. But he never lost his nerve. He got his eastern backers to help him organize banks to relieve the situation. The Union Banking company, capital $250,000, was started, and with its money the First national bank of Marion was bought, and the Union Banking company of Greensburg, Kan., Union Banking company of Jetmore, Kan., Union Banking company of Holt, Kan., were organized as branches of the First national of Marion.

But this scheme failed. His business began to dwindle. So he went to Sioux City, organized the Union Trust company in the latter part of 1888 with an authorized capital of $1,000,000, paid up $600,000, with Hosmer as president and himself secretary. This company succeeded to all the assets and liabilities of the Kansas concerns. In connection with this company the following Iowa banks were organized:

First national bank, Ida Grove; First national bank, Holstein; Sloan state bank, Sloan; Danbury state bank, Danbury; First Ute bank, Ute; Woodbine savings bank, Woodbine; Cushing savings bank, Cushing; Castana savings bank, Castana; Schaller savings bank, Schaller; Aurelia savings bank, Aurelia; Bank of Modale, Modale.

At first this scheme was successful, but like his Kansas venture it, too, began to fail. Then he started a big ranch near Marion, Kan., and spent thousands of dollars on it. This broke the Union Trust company. About this time Donaldson began to see that ruin was inevitable. So he moved here and organized his cattle company into a branch of the Union Trust company.

Then he began to plunder. Two of the Iowa banks were sold and an attempt was made to sell the others, but the financial stringency stopped him. Thereupon he laid hands on all the assets of all the banks and the trust company and disposed of them. Within the last ninety days all of the banks and the trust company have gone into receivers' hands. James Doughty, of Sioux City, was appointed receiver for the trust company and the Iowa banks about June 28.

In July the First national bank of Marion was closed and Special Bank Examiner W. A. Latimer took charge last Tuesday. The same day Donaldson fled. The examiner says he is $24,000 short at that bank.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Aug. 23—Monday afternoon Theodore P. Haughey, president of the wrecked Indianapolis national bank, was arrested at his home near this city on a warrant sworn out by Receiver Hawkins charging him with embezzlement and misappropriation of funds and credits of the bank from January 1, 1892, until July 24, 1893. Simultaneously with the arrest of President Haughey the federal officers arrested his son, Schuyler C. Haughey, president of the Indianapolis curled hair works and the Indianapolis glue works. A little later Francis A. Coffin, president of the Indianapolis Cabinet company; Percival Coffin, vice president of the company, and A. T. Reed, treasurer of the same concern, were gathered in. Young Haughey, the Coffins and Reed were charged with having aided and abetted the elder Haughey in the embezzlements and misappropriation of credits charged against him.

The arrests were made as quietly as possible and the arrested men were taken before United States Commissioner Van Buren, who released them on bonds furnished as follows: Theodore P. Haughey, $10,000; Schuyler C. Haughey, $10,000; Francis A. Coffin, $5,000; Perciyal Coffin, $5,000, and Albert T. Reed, $5,000.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

The State's Finances.

The annual report of the state treasurer for the year ending July 31 was issued yesterday. The report shows the finances of the state to be in excellent condition. The main feature relates to the state debt, which is shown to have been reduced from $2,051,734.77 to $1,971,306.89 during the past year, or $80,427.88. The investments in the state trust funds have increased from $10,844,477.38 to $11,421,395.35, or $576,917.97. Since the statement was issued Ramsey and Hennepin counties have paid their tax settlement, which will add to the revenue about $410,000. Several other counties remain yet to be heard from, including St. Louis county, which will probably add about $100,000 more. Last year the money was deposited in 34 banks, but this year, under the new law, it is distributed among 73. Various trust funds hold the money, with the important exception of $1,200,000, which is held by New York savings banks. The printed statement, as issued, is as follows:

Accidentally Shot.

A distressing accident occurred at the residence of H. H. Young, mayor of Lake City. Christina Archibald, the 10-year-old daughter of Mrs. M. A. Archibald, of Minneapolis, was instantly killed by a bullet from a revolver in the hands of Albert Young, the youngest son of Mayor Young. The little girl was shot through the heart.

Albert was amusing himself with his brother's 32-caliber revolver. He "didn't know it was loaded" and playfully snapped it. The bullet passed through a closed door and struck the little girl, killing her on the spot. The boy had handled the revolver several times before when it was not loaded, and knew that it was his brother's custom to withdraw the cartridges when leaving the weapon in the house, but in the last instance the usual carefulness had not been observed.

Fell to Death.

Michael Cloonan, for 11 years a member of the St. Paul fire department, and a lieutenant of engine company No. 8, lost his life at a fire in the music store of W. J. Dyer & Bro., on Third street. He was at the top of a 75-foot extension ladder, with two other firemen, and the smoke from the paint and varnish in the piano rooms suffocated him. His neck was broken and his body terribly bruised and broken by the fall. He has a wife and four children. Capt. Strapp and Lieut. Murphy narrowly escaped going the same road with Cloonan, but were rescued before they had been overcome by the fumes. The damage to the Dyer stock was about $60,000, and to the building about $2,000. The fire originated in the work room on the fourth floor.

Suicide.

A man named Joresdale shot himself on a Great Northern train. He was going from Minneapolis to Cottonwood with his family, consisting of wife and four children. Somewhere between Willmar and Granite Falls he went into the water closet. When the train reached Cottonwood the family got ready to get off, but could find nothing of the husband. Supposing he had got off somewhere by mistake they left the train. Between Cottonwood and Marshall it was ascertained that the closet door had been locked for some time, and upon investigatien he was found on the inside dead. When the train reached Marshall it was found necessary to take him out through the window, as the door could not be opened.

An eye witness to the accident stated that he talked to Pettijohn at the time and twice pulled him away, but he went back on the track and was crushed under the wheels, his body being dragged about 15 feet. He had previously been talking to another person in the same vicinity and appeared very cheerful.

BRUIN'S END.

A Description of a Lively Bear-Hunt in Russia.

Yegor returned at eight o'clock, hot and radiant. He had ringed the bear, which proved to have passed the night, in the most obliging manner, close to the village. He had posted his thirty beaters, and all was ready for us. This was really most satisfactory, and Yegor thoroughly deserved the generous dose allotted to him by A. from out of the silver medicine bottle which that sportsman invariably carries with him when out shooting. Then, escorted to the further end of the village by the whole boy and girl population, who stared at us with big eyes and made audible remarks upon our personal appearance, we sallied forth and were shown to our places in the ring. All this took place in the most complete silence. As I sat behind my snow-laden bush, waiting for the beat to commence, so perfect was the stillness around me that it was most difficult to realize that there were at least thirty-five men and women, besides a bear, within a short distance of me, as well as in all probability numbers of hares, a fox or two, a sprinkling of tree partridges, black game and willow grouse, with perhaps a capercailzie to complete the list. So far as any outward sign of all this vigorous life nigh at hand was concerned, I might well have been the only living creature within three miles. Then suddenly a voice rang out, followed instantly by another; at once thirty lusty throats took up the tale; the beat had commenced. Bruin was afoot and about immediately, of course. He was not the person to sit and dream while the enemy was on the war path. He first charged the beaters, but was quickly booed back into the ring by those intrepid individuals. Then, to our intense excitement, he began to gallop up and down in front of us, but about a hundred yards away. We caught a glimpse now and again of his big brown body as it passed and repassed, but none of us fired, lest by doing so we should discourage him from paying us a closer visit by and by. At last our patience was rewarded; he suddenly turned in our direction and bore straight down upon us, taking a line which would carry him out of the ring between B. and C.

B. allowed the monster to approach within forty paces, and then fired. The shot struck him in one of his front paws and infuriated him. He bit at the wounded paw and looked savagely around for something to vent his feelings upon. Observing the smoke which still hung around B.'s place, he forthwith came tearing down upon B. like an incarnated fury. B. gave him his second barrel, and hit him, but failed to stop his rush. B. now began to look a little anxious, and fumbled with the breech of his smoothbore. At this critical moment, however, C. came to his rescue, and planted a neat shot in poor Bruin's body. This turned him just in time for B.'s comfort! The bear was now so sorely wounded that he did not seem to know in which direction he was heading. He picked himself up and made for the first beater he saw. The latter gentleman very wisely, and with marvellous expedition, shinned up a tree, which was the very wisest thing he could do, for Bruin clearly meant mischief, and was no longer to be turned back by a few shouts. Then he chased other beaters about, making it exceedingly lively for them, and populating a dozen or so of pines with human burdens. But by this time we all burning for the fray, had arrived upon the scene, and poor Bruin's last hour was at hand. He charged B., who seemed to be his pet aversion, and was knocked over once more by that undaunted Englishman. Then he made for A., who allowed him to approach almost within reach of the muzzle of the gun, and to rise upon his hind legs before he pulled the trigger. At the sound of the shot over went the enduring Mr. Bruin, dead as the proverbial mutton, going twice head over heels with the impetus of the fall, but never moving a limb afterward.

Then the beaters approached and surrounded this good bear which had made so heroic a fight for its life, and each vied with the other in the violence with which he poured forth abuse over its poor carcase.—Longman's.

ROSY-CHEEK AND CURLY-HEAD.

When I go home, this welcome waits
  Each evening when the day is fled:
The pattering of little feet;
Then clinging arms, and kisses sweet
  From rosy-cheek and curly-head.

They come with shouts of rioting:
  They're laughing so they scarce can speak.
A pair of highwaymen are they;
And I, an easy yielding prey
  To curly-head and rosy-cheek.

But curly heads will sometimes ache,
  And fill our souls with sudden dread;
And roses fade, while hearts stand still.
Oh, may there come no touch of ill
  To rosy-cheek and curly-head!

God bless all little cheeks of rose!
  Where'er they bloom, Thy sunlight shed!
Bless little heads of rippling hair!
Oh, take into Thy tender care
  Each rosy-cheek and curly-head!

HICK'S PATENT COOKER.

The Pathetic Story That Induced the Rector to Buy.

"I would like to call your attention to my paytent cooker," said the mild-mannered man with the soft low voice to the rector of St. Bartholomew's. "It consists, as mebbe you can see—"

"But I don't desire a cooker, and would not look at one if I did," interrupted the rector of St. Bartholomew's in as irascible manner as is permitted to his cloth.

"They come in three sizes," continued the mild-mannered man with the soft low voice—"small, mejum and large. They're made of tin, genuwine block tin, not rolled tin. I have frequently been congratulated on the quality of my tin. Said Bishop Dobson to me: 'Hicks, I congratulate you on the quality of your tin.'"

"Bishop Dobson?" queried the rector of St. Bartholomew's with languid interest. "I don't remember to have seen his name in the church calendar."

"Methody," explained the mild-mannered man. "I'm a Methody. Here's a certificate from my pastor saying I'm an individooal of moral character and use good tin in my cookers. Here's a letter from Rev. Edward Atkins—but I don't set much store by that, bein' as he is a Baptis', and no judge of tin. The principle on which my cooker is based—"

"You will have to excuse me," said the rector of St. Bartholomew's, looking hard at the heavy gold watch presented him by the parish on his last birthday, "but I have a sermon to write."

"Mebbe your lady would like to see the cooker," said the mild-mannered man. "It's made of genuwine block-tin, and Bishop Dobson himself said: 'Hicks, I congratulate you on the quality of your tin.'"

"I have no wife," said the rector, with the merest suspicion of a blush.

"Then buy a cooker and git one," said the mild-mannered man, confidentially. "With Hicks' paytent cooker as an argumint, you will git one easy. They come in three sizes—small, mejum and large. This here is the small one. Folds all up, you see, like a telescope. Mebbe you wouldn't believe it, but one of them small-sized cookers saved my life once. It was in the spring of 1853, or the fall of 1852, or the winter of 1854, I don't remember which and it don't make no difference, that Rev. Dr. James Wilyums, D. D., and I took passage for Africky in the brig Thomas J. Walkup, goin' as missionaries to some of the numerous cannibal tribes that keeps down the population, and consequently accounts for the depressed values of real estate in the Dark Continent. Rev. Dr. Wilyums was to teach the savages religion, but my mission was a more important one. I was to introduce Hicks' paytent cooker among 'em. You can see that even this large-sized cooker won't hold a man, to say nothin' of the mejum and small ones. Now I calculated to teach the savages to use my cookers, and when they got so attached to 'em as to never eat nothin' except what was cooked in a cooker—seein' that you couldn't cook a man in 'em—cannibalism would naturally die out. When I broached my plan to Bishop Dobson his eyes shone and he said: 'Go, Hicks, go. Your work will supplement the work of Rev. Dr. Wilyums. I heartily commend your plan, and I congratulate you on the quality of your tin.' Them was his words, and I went.

"Well, sir, the mornin' after I arrived in Africky I began to talk to the chief about my cooker, when what does he do but take me down to the leadin' grocery store of the town and show me Rev. Dr. Wilyums chained up.

"'Can you cook him?' axed the chief.

"'No,' said I, my breath all gone with surprise at the turn affairs had took.

"'Well,' said the old chief, 'them's the kind of victuals we eats. We don't consume much in the way of breakfast foods, infants' foods and the like. If your cooker can't cook our style of provisions we ain't got any use for it.'

"And with that they put me in their jail, and that was the last I ever seen or heerd of Rev. Dr. James Wilyums, D. D. They would have et me at once, but the chief's daughter, Ugogina, fell in love with me, and made 'em put off the obsequies or festivities, according as you looked at it from my standpoint or the savages'. I talked nice to Ugogina, and got her to bring me my small-sized cooker, the only one the old witch doctor what kept the cookers would let her have; and with that I cooked them savages the finest kinds of victuals they ever et, and they set me free and made me royal cook, and the chief kinder smiled indulgently at the way Ugogina was makin' up to me. So you see the small-sized cooker saved my life."

"I'll buy the small size," said the rector, hastily. "I have a sermon to write."

"Now you just take my advice and git a mejum size. You can afford it. When you take that small-sized cooker round to that young lady you're after, when you ask her to marry you what'll she think? Why, she'll say to herself that in buyin' this small cooker you are layin' out not to ever have any company to meals, and if she is a girl that is fond of company, you're runnin' a risk. Wait till I tell you how the mejum-sized cooker saved my life. Well, the old witch doctor took a big dislike to me, and kept tellin' the folks that I would make a better meal cooked than I would cookin'. Ugogina wanted to marry me, and the chief was willin', but the witch doctor prophesied a lot of calamities if the marriage took place, and scared the chief. Now I didn't want to marry Ugogina, but I could see that if I did I would be saved from bein' et; but I thought I would try to save myself and get out of the marriage also. I could have run off to sea any day, but there warn't no boats. I could see ships sailin' by quite often, but there warn't no way to git off to 'em. I decided to fix the witch doctor first. I got Ugogina to wheedle the old feller to give me my mejum-sized cooker, the small-sized not bein' large enough for my purposes. Then I got a lot of African beans and some hollow reeds and some sticky clay. I set the beans a cookin' and put the reeds into a little hole I made in top of the cooker. I invited the witch doctor in, and told him this was some of my new vaporized atmospheric air, and told him to put his mouth to the reeds and suck some in. You know, if you have studied chemistry, that beans are highly charged with gas. Especially is this true of the genuine African bean. Well, sir, that old chap swallered a lot of that gas, and quicker than a wink Ugogina and I knocked him over and plastered his nose and mouth up with clay, and I'm a dummed liar if that gas didn't float that old feller right up in the air, clear out of sight. You see, he was remarkably capacious, and the gas was remarkably strong—remarkably strong. I stood there in front of the people when he was floatin' in the air, and told 'em I was a magician, and could set 'em all floatin'. They was scared; wanted to elect me chief; but I wasn't used to high political honors, and compromised with alderman and president of the school board. Well, sir, Ugogina was dyin' to marry me at once; but I staved her off for a time by sayin' I wanted to git my trousseau ready. That's how the mejum-sized cooker saved my life."

"I will buy a medium-sized one," said the rector, faintly. "It can be used by St. Margaret's ward of the guild church fairs."

"Or country fairs, either. However, I think you would like the large-sized cooker for the church fairs. But you wait till I finish my story. Now, I was engaged to a girl in the United States. If I married Ugogina what would be the consequences? Breach of promise suit for ten thousand dollars, and me with no assets but three sample cookers of block tin. What then? Default of payment, state's prison for life. 'Sides, I didn't want to marry Ugogina. What did I do? Well, sir, one day I see a ship goin by, and, stretchin' out the large-sized cooker—they are all air-tight—I jumped on it and paddled off to the ship, poundin' on the small and mejum-sized all the way to scare sharks. That's how the large-sized cooker saved my life."

"Put me down for the large size," said the rector of St. Bartholomew's, wearily.

"I knowed you would," said the mild-mannered man with the soft, low voice. "There's something affectin' in the story of how them cookers saved my life."—Wardon Allan Curtis, in Harper's Weekly.

The King of Spiders.

Ceylon is the home of the largest species of spider that has yet been made the subject of entomological investigation. This web-spinning monster lives in the most mountainous districts of that rugged island, and places his trap—not a gossamer snare of airy lightness—but a huge net of yellow silk from five to ten feet in diameter, across chasms and fissures in the rocks. The supporting guys on this gigantic net, which in all cases is almost strong enough for a hammock, are from five to twenty feet in length (as conditions and circumstances may require) made of a series of twisted webs, the whole being of the diameter of a lead pencil. As might be imagined, this gigantic silken trap is not set for mosquitoes, flies and pestiferous gnats, but for birds, gaudy moths and elegantly painted butterflies, some of the latter having a spread of wing equal to that of a robin or a blue jay. Some extra fine skeletons of small birds, lizards, snakes, etc., have been found in these webs, with every vestige of flesh picked from them. The owner and maker of these queer silk traps is a spider with a body averaging four and a half inches in width and six length, and with legs nine to twelve inches from body to terminal claw. Some are spotted, others red with greenish gold abdomen and legs.—St Louis Republic.

The Other Dear Charmer.

"It is really a great pity," said Esmerelda Cervantes, the harpist, who is on terms of intimate friendship with the different members of the Spanish royal family, "that Princess Isabella, Eulalia's eldest sister, did not come to America instead of Eulalia. She is one of the most admirable and accomplished women I ever knew. Hers is indeed a noble character. She is a widow and devotes herself to good works and the arts. She is a thorough musician and is the author of some very fine musical compositions. It would really be difficult to fancy two people more totally unlike than are these two royal sisters. Neither do they look alike, as you can see by their photographs," and Mlle. Cervantes produced two inscribed pictures, one a very good likeness of Infanta Eulalia and the other representing a sweet, dignified, refined woman, somewhat older but much handsomer. "Princess Isabella is greatly beloved in Madrid," continued Mlle. Cervantes. "Had she come here she would have won golden opinions for herself and the Spanish people. Unlike Eulalia, she is of equable temper and is always to be relied upon. I am very fond of her and consider it not only an honor but a privilege to be numbered among her friends."—Chicago Post.

Thought She Was Ill.

An extremely ludicrous incident occurred in a Lancashire church on a recent Sunday. A young lady, evidently a stranger, of a naturally pale complexion, accidentally let her handkerchief drop on the floor. By repeatedly stooping to reach it furtively she attracted the notice of a gentleman in the pew behind, who thought she was about to faint. With the best of motives, therefore, he took her gently under the arms and raised her up, greatly to her surprise. As she tried to release herself another gentleman went to her assistance, and before the young lady knew what was the matter they were moving her out into the aisle. Naturally she was too much astonished to find words for protest, and they had managed to half carry, half lead her some distance, when she directed an appealing look to another gentleman in a pew, as if asking him to help also. He, too, promptly rose from his seat and helped to lift her up and carry her into the vestry room. There she recovered her powers of speech and mutual explanations soon exposed the ludicrousness of the situation.—Million.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—It is estimated that the Catholic temperance societies of the United States have more than 100,000 members.

—Rev. Dr. Edward B. Palmer, of Boston, has attended every commencement celebration of Barstow college since he graduated from that institution in 1856.

—David S. Muzzey, of Lexington, Mass., who graduated this year from Harvard with honors, has been appointed professor of mathematics at Roberts college, Constantinople.

—Rev. Robert Coleman, late superintendent of the Presbyterian Indian school at Albuquerque, N. M., has been appointed Presbyterian missionary for Wyoming and will be located in Cheyenne.

—Prof. Mace, of Syracuse university, has sailed for England, and upon invitation will lecture before the summer meeting at Cambridge university. He is the first American ever asked to lecture before the Cambridge society.

—Prof. Haupt, of Johns Hopkins university, has discovered the missing piece of the eleventh tablet of the Nimrod epic. The tablet contains the Babylonian or Chaldean account of the deluge, and is over three thousand years old.

—Miss Soondarbi H. Powar, an accomplished Indian lady, who has been in London for some time past, has returned to Poona, India, where she will be associated with her friend, the heroic Pundita Ramabai, in conducting the school for high caste Hindoo widows.

—The two women's colleges of Newnham and Girton have sent a number of successful candidates to the Cambridge examinations this year. It is interesting to know that the college rooms of these to-be-wranglers are very dainty. They are full of feminine work, liberally supplied with mirrors, and look more like a boudoir than a study.

—The committee on observance of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the consecration of the first bishop of Albany, which occurs next year, has decided to build a chapter house as a fitting recognition of Bishop Doane's labors. Rev. Charles S. Olmsted, of Cooperstown, is secretary of the committee, which desires to raise twenty-five thousand dollars.

—The receipts of the American board, as compared with last year, fell off in June in donations $10,892.55, and in legacies $18,745.26. The total loss for the ten months is $79,100.63. This means extensive crippling of missionary enterprises in many points, and may result in losses which can not be recovered for many years.—Congregationalist.

—It is worth remarking that in spite of the devotion of Yale college to athletics, and of the somewhat monotonous success of her efforts in that direction, the Yale valedictorian of this year scored the highest average of scholarship that has ever been made at New Haven. So it seems at least that the diligence of some men in running foot-races, and of others in various exercises of field and flood, affords no insurmountable obstacle to coincident exploits in scholarship by gentlemen who are minded that way.—Harper's Weekly.

COOLIE SLAVERY IN CUBA.

Tin Chin's Terrible Experience with a Brutal Spanish Taskmaster.

It is said that the unfortunate Chinamen who go to Cuba to labor under contract on the sugar plantations there are held, the most of them, in a state of slavery to which the condition of the negroes before the war was paradise itself. The following is related as a typical case. One of the Chinamen, Tin Chin, presented a frightful aspect. His head was as smooth as a billiard ball, not vestige of hair remaining. His face was covered with long, deep scars, the sight of one eye was lost, his neck was distorted and his hands were shriveled and bony. Inquiry resulted in learning that he had been the victim of the wrath of a notorious brutal Spanish planter. One day, three years ago, when Tin Chin and a hundred other coolies were transferring boiling sugar from the vats in pails, the planter or overseer stood at the entrance to the sugar house, whip in hand, snapping it at the bared backs of the coolies as they, bending under the weight of the buckets, hurried past. Tin Chin lagged a moment. The planter cut the Chinaman with the whip, and because the latter wriggled under the pain of the blow the brutal overseer grabbed up a bucket of the boiling sugar and, with an oath, deliberately poured the contents down upon the head of the Chinaman. He was scalded from head to foot. He fell insensible at the feet of his tormenter, who savagely kicked the Chinaman's prostrate body aside and again took up his position at the entrance, whip in hand, ready at the slightest provocation to flay alive the next Chinaman who inturned his wrath. That night, under cover of darkness, some of Tin Chin's countrymen carried him to his den, and there he lay for months, hovering between life and death, without medical treatment other than that which the coolies could afford him. Much rather would the planter have seen him die, for then Tin Chin's contract would die with him, and no money would have to be paid for Chin's long years of service.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Record Breaking.

If the horses will finish the speeding season as successfully as the steam engine has opened it, this year of grace 1893 will mark a good many important smashings of the records. On land we have a New York Central engine doing a mile in thirty-two seconds, while on the Atlantic the new Cunarder has surpassed all performances on the eastward passage. The public appreciation of high speed grows keener year by year. Americans like sport, especially if the character of it is above reproach; and in the tests of engines, land and marine, they have no reason to worry over the chance of crooked work. Every time a record is broken the public is delighted. And there seems to be every promise that this year will bring a great deal of enjoyment of the kind to the residents of these United States.—Railway Times and Financial Register.

THEY RESPECT THE SKUNK,

And Have Good Reason To, Up in the Hop-Growing Counties.

"If you want to get yourself thoroughly disliked in a community," said a New York traveling man, "go up into Otsego county, or any of the hop-growing counties of the state, and talk mean about the skunk. You don't need to kill a skunk to get the people down on you. Merely talk mean about the animal and you'll get talked back to, and don't you forget it. The hop-growing counties are the only localities, I guess, in the whole country where it is no sign of disrespect to call a man a skunk. In every other place, when you want to say the meanest thing you can think of about some one else, you feel that you have done the subject justice if you call him a skunk, and the man will doubtless think so too, and maybe lick you. But it isn't so in the hop counties. To call a man a skunk up there is equivalent to telling him that he is one of the most useful of citizens, and he'll thank you.

"Whatever benefits the hop grower in that belt of counties benefits the entire community, for everybody depends on the hop crop for his material welfare. And the farmers having made the discovery that the formerly despised skunk is the greatest friend they have in their business, that animal has become everybody's friend, and you want to be careful and treat the skunk with respect if you go into the hop country. They protect skunks up there as carefully as, if not more carefully than, they do song birds. The usual habit of this little animal is to hunt his living at night, which has given him a bad name, the inference being that night prowlers are never after any good. The poor skunk has had to suffer many and many a time for the work of two-legged chicken thieves. The animal hunts by night in the hop country, too, but he also does the same by day, because he has discovered that the people recognize the fact that he has long been misjudged and discredited, and he sees that they have now implicit confidence in him. So he may be seen any day in the hop fields, not infrequently walking along the rows of vines, if not in company, at least without any fear of the farmer who may be cultivating a row next to him.

"There is a grub peculiar to hop fields which is one of the most destructive and insidious pests the grower has to deal with. This grub gets his work in on the roots of the vines, gnawing them just below the surface of the ground, and killing every vine he works on. Now, in this grub the skunk has found a most toothsome and juicy morsel, just suited to his epicurean palate, and he hunts the pest with such persistence and perseverance that it is estimated that last season he saved to the farmers of Otsego county alone the product of more than one thousand acres of vineyard which the grubs would have destroyed. It is interesting to see a skunk hunting grubs in a hop field. He stops at the very end hill of a row of vines, and, placing one ear close to the ground, listens intently. He has an ear as acute as the woodpecker, listening for a grub that is working deep in the trunk of a tree, and if there is one of the hop pests gnawing at the root of the vine he hears it. He digs it out with his paw, devours it and then listens again. He never leaves a hill until he is satisfied that he has destroyed every grub buried there, then he passes on to the next hill, and thus works his way the entire length of a row, coming back on the next row, and so on until he has taken out every grub. A dozen or so of skunks working in a field soon relieve it of its grub pests.

"That is why it will not elevate you in the estimation of the people of the hop counties if you talk mean about the skunk, for he is one of their most useful and respected citizens."—N. Y. Sun.

There Was No Room for Doubt.

A well-dressed young man was pacing to and fro in front of one of the big dry-goods store with ever an anxious, eager glance in the direction of the entrance, apparently waiting for some one who had gone inside. In the doorway a bevy of pretty girls met by accident and stood chatting, when all at once they noticed the clouds, which had been lowering and threatening all day, collapse and the rain came down. Of course there was a grand stampede for the shelter of the doorway. The young man and his best girl who at that moment joined him, alone remained standing in front of the show-window. "Dear me, what a great stupid he is," said one of the girls. "They will get drenched. Why doesn't he open his big green umbrella?"

The poor fellow was struggling—evidently something was the matter—his face growing scarlet and more scarlet as he became conscious of the amused audience in the doorway.

Near Enough for a Foreigner.

The difficulty experienced by foreigners in grasping the point of an American joke was amazingly shown a few nights ago at one of the seashore resorts. One of the gentlemen of a party perpetrated the old story of the ancient knight who suddenly experienced a pain and then asked if anyone could tell him what time of day it was when this tearful incident befell his knightship. The answer—in the middle of the knight—was immensely enjoyed by a French girl present, who soon after tried to work off the same conundrum to a newcomer. She proceeded with the preliminaries of the story with a great deal of difficulty, and required some outside assistance. "Now," she said, "vat time you sae it was?" "I really can't imagine," said the newcomer. "Vy," she said, triumphantly, "it vas at meednight."—Philadelphia Record.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—The expression, "Vox populi vox Dei"—the voice of the people is the voice of God—was used in the writings of William Malmesbury, who was born A. D. 1075 and died about 1142. He quoted the expression as a proverb even in his time sufficiently well known.

—Mr. J. W. Holden, of Otisfield, Me., has gone down to Boston to convert that town to his belief in the "non-revolution" of the earth. He has hired one of the public halls of the city for this purpose. "Prof." Holden is described as a farmer, proprietor of a circular saw-mill, selectman, town agent and lecturer, and is said strongly to resemble the late Daniel Pratt.

—Austin Dobson is described as looking utterly unlike one's idea of a poet. "He is the type of the common, sensible, middle-class Englishman. He is stout and of medium height, and has a florid compexion, a pair of shrewd, kindly, bluish-gray eyes, an acquiline nose, a moderate quantity of dark brown hair, and a thick bushy mustache."

The New Bread

As endorsed and recommended by the New-York Health Authorities.

Royal Unfermented Bread is peptic, palatable, most healthful, and may be eaten warm and fresh without discomfort even by those of delicate digestion, which is not true of bread made in any other way.

To make One Loaf of Royal Unfermented Bread:

1 quart flour, 1 teaspoonful salt, half a teaspoonful sugar, 2 heaping teaspoonfuls Royal Baking Powder,* cold boiled potato about the size of large hen's egg, and water. Sift together thoroughly flour, salt, sugar, and baking powder; rub in the potato; add sufficient water to mix smoothly and rapidly into a stiff batter, about as soft as for pound-cake; about a pint of water to a quart of flour will be required—more or less, according to the brand and quality of the flour used. Do not make a stiff dough, like yeast bread. Pour the batter into a greased pan, 4½ by 8 inches, and 4 inches deep, filling about half full. The loaf will rise to fill the pan when baked. Bake in very hot oven 45 minutes, placing paper over first 15 minutes' baking, to prevent crusting too soon on top. Bake immediately after mixing. Do not mix with milk.

* Perfect success can be had only with the Royal Baking Powder, because it is the only powder in which the ingredients are prepared so as to give that continuous action necessary to raise the larger bread loaf.

The best baking powder made is, as shown by analysis, the "Royal." Its leavening strength has been found superior to other baking powders, and, as far as I know, it is the only powder which will raise large bread perfectly.

BRITISH POSSESSIONS.

THE first case for the recovery of the special tax levied on absentee landowners in New Zealand recently came before the Wellington resident magistrate. In the mother country the state would be a heavy gainer by such prosecutions.

CANADA has been fairly fortunate during the last six months as regards failures. The greatest improvement is in the province of Quebec, and the improvement extends in a lesser degree to New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Manitoba.

THE estimates for the year in New Zealand show a surplus of £130,000. The government intends to devote £250,000 to the construction of public works. For the present no attempt will be made to place a loan on the London money market.

DELANO DIARY

—Old papers for sale at this office.

—Brick $8 per 1000 at John Coolen's.

—If you need lime, call on John Coolen. 27.

—If you want brick go to John Coolen's.

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

—Whoopingcough is quite prevalent among Delano children at present.

—After taking legal advice, the city council concluded to pay the bills in the case of the village of Delano vs. Andrew Bockman.

—Jake Mayer, Frank Fisk and Fred Lindsley are among the latest to become proprietors of new bicycles, each has a bran, span, new safety.

—A jolly lot of young Delanoites left this week for the west to make up a threshing crew. This beats sitting around doing nothing all to pieces.

—A ditch several feet deep on second street is left too long in a dangerous condition, it should be filled up or covered over to keep people from falling into it.

—A couple of Waverly sports appeared on our streets Sunday last in undress uniform. On being asked "where are your clothes?" the answer came, "we came down on our wheels."

—The State of Minnesota vs. J. W. Parsons was tried before Esquire Walter last week. J. W. plead guilty and was fined $5 and costs. Complaining witness J. F. Powers; charge, using obusive language.

—The intelligence has reached here that Sam Cutter, of Delano, is to be married to Miss Walker of Mound City. The wedding will occur at Minneapolis. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Cutter of this city.—St. Peter Herald.

—Scarcely a day goes by but several bicyclists are seen passing through town. The wheel appears to be superceding horse flesh for dry weather traveling. When it gets muddy or the snow comes we predict horses will be in greater demand.

—Simon Weldele visited Dr. Williams at St. Paul, with his little son Willie who was shot with an air gun in the eye a few weeks ago. The doctor says he cannot see again, but that the inflamation has so far subsided that he will not have to visit him again.

—John Mayer is at work on the G. N. in Washington. His wife expects to make a tour of inspection soon and if she likes will move to Spokane, Seattle or some other place in the state, if she is not pleased with the west she will, with the family, make Delano her home for awhile again.

—As the 4 p. m. train came in Wednesday Enas Algers and Charley Gould were trying to teach a young mare not to be afraid of the cars. The y. m. took to kicking and broke both shaves, and freed herself from the buggy. Chas Gould received one kick on the lower jaw almost breaking it.

—On Tuesday a fine specimen of the genius tramp was seen for several hours near the railroad crossing on the west side lying at full length, his budget beside him, so near the main road as to make teams shy at him. He should have been ordered away from there, and assisted to some place where he would not endanger his own or other people's lives.

—Rubber tires on baby buggies, where they are so numerous as in Delano, is a great improvement, and does away with a gaeat deal of noise and bustle of the city. One objection the fond mother may glide so noiselessly by as to escape the greetings awaiting her offspring had it not been for the new style tire. They are a good thing any way, —Travelers over the Woodland road for several days this week noticed a one-horse wagon upside down in the ditch about a mile and a half west of town. One shaft was broke and the horse had gone home alone. The passengers are said to have been too heavily loaded to keep right side up for so long a distance.

—Off Friday afternoon, Mrs Robert Weisner got in front of a mower which a boy was driving and received a very severe wound, both bones of the left leg being completely cut off just above the ankle. A surgeon was summoned from town and the limb dressed and the patient made as comfortable as possible under the circumstances. On Tuesday the leg was amputated, about the lower third being removed.

—If any one desires to see a small piece of tin that was once called "American Tin" and worn on a string by the Republican Congressional Committee man of this district for a very short time previous to the election of Maj. Baldwin and the defeat of said committee man's candidate, let them step into our office and examine our relics. This poor, lone, "imported" orphan was taken in out of the cold, dreary street.

—School is to begin on Monday September 4.

—A new barn swells the number of buildings on the west side.

—A couple of chimney sweeps did a thriving business in town yesterday.

—The Eagle announces herself as being 21 years old. Who'd a thunk it? Almost an old maid.

—Read the list of Congressional Committees appointed by Speaker Crisp, on the inside of this paper.

—Councilman Bock and Mr. Sosnik Jr. overturned a load of feed at the west end of the wagon bridge yesterday.

—Cal Steward is having an addition to his already commodious farm home made. J. C. McDonald is doing the work.

—Some of our citizens now take the "middle of the road" when going home late at night. They must be Alliance folks.

—Messrs. Hawker and Freeman, who live in the suburbs are again encouraged to believe that they will some day have roads to the villages.

—The Daughters of Rebecca will give an entertainment and supper on the lawn between Parslow's and Lindsley's next Tuesday evening.

—Complaint has been made that high weeds on vacant lots and in other places in the village are allowed to thrive altogether too luxuriantly.

—Several places in the roads need the attention of the road bosses. Culverts need repairs where the heavy threshing outfits have traveled over them.

—O. L. Billings stepped on a nail yesterday and now uses a cane. He says he ought to have a pension, and he has been in that business long enough to know.

—Some people complain that there is no money to buy wheat with. How would it do to take off the tariffs from woolens and exchange a lot of our wheat for good warm winter wear?

—We understand that a couple of our industrious youths were so charmed with the chimney sweeps who were here yesterday that they have decided to go into the business themselves.

"Are you willing to invest money in my aerial navigation scheme?" he asked. "No." "You can't deny it looks all right on paper." "That's true; but I don't propose to get stuck on any fly paper."—Washington Star.

—The Eagle screeches out against the Great Northern Railroad for raising its freight tariff, and can hardly find language sufficiently commendatory of the McKinley bill for raising tariffs on nearly every thing. Be consistant old bird! Be consitant.

—According to the liquor license law no license can be granted for a longer time than 20 days after the next annual election of village officers. Owing to the lax way in which our village and other affairs have been conducted in the past of course no saloon keeper in town will have a legal license to sell for longer than 20 days after next March election, although he has paid his $500 for a supposed one year's license. It might pay to have a village attorney to look after such things.

—Last Friday night between the hours of 10 and 12 residents on South Third street were aroused from their peaceful slumbers by a loud crash, mingled with female voices, which very much resembled the falling of boards almost equal to a house falling down, and some thought that a cyclone had struck that portion of the city, but on investigation found that it was nothing more nor less than a bed, which was occupied by a couple of our charming damsels, had collapsed and spilled the young ladies upon the floor.

—Railroad Avenue has at times been filled in in the middle and graded out at the sides until from Third to Second street, it looks like a street, but from 2d street to the river it is a disgrace to any civilized community. After every rain the few shovels full of gravel that are from time to time dumped in the low places are washed out. It would be a very small job for any intelligent person to so arrange matters as to make it as good a piece of road as that first mentioned, and the village is about old enough to have it done properly.

—A few nights ago Mrs. John Cunningham was awakened by a "gun" or a "cannon" or "something" being fired off in the cellar, and endeavored to arouse her sleeping spouse to go and see what the matter was; but he was too much absorbed in dreaming of the tented fields, heavy marches, and roarring of cannon of the "late unpleasantness" to be disturbed by such small things. On investigation in the morning it was found that Miss Julia had determined to learn for herself whether or not sweet corn could be canned and filled a quart glass jar and closely looked after it for two days and had about concluded to try some more when the "explosion" occured.

Among Our Exchanges.

The stirring slogan, "America for the Americans," is ringing forth again in certain quarters. This means that we should all emigrate and leave the country to the Indians, which would, perhaps, be a good scheme, but we have a few chores that we would like to get done first.—Starbuck Journal.

The reign of "fads" is not confined to the St. Paul schools. At their last meeting, the board of education of the Delano public schools made provisions for teaching music in all the departments of the schools, and shorthand in the high school.—St. Paul Daily News.

It is claimed that a majority of the teachers in the country have recommended free text books. This can hardly be the fact. There are in this county, we are informed, about 250 teachers about 80 of whom signed some sort of a resolution which was supposed to be in favor of free text books. --Buffalo Journal.

From the St. Paul Broad Axe.

Five years ago when Cleveland left the White House the nation was in a prosperous condition. Four years later when he returned the nation was in the throes of financial disaster. When he leaves the White House again the people will be enjoying an era of unprecidented prosperity, and a good democrat will take his place.—Minneapolis Times.

If the repeal of the Sherman law will bring better times let us have it repealed by all means. But if the president had omitted all mention of the tariff in his adress to congress, or had firmly stated that he was opposed to meddling with that question, we would have had far more confidence in the restoration of good times. Business will not prosper, money be plenty, or times improve, so long as the tariff for revenue plank of the democratic platform hangs like an incubus over the country.—Shelburne County Star News.

If the tariff law is such a troublesome thing why not repeal it too?

John McCulloch, a member of parliament from Dumfries, Scotland, made a speech at the Irish demonstration in Chicago last Tuesday and said that home rule was wanted in Scotland, in Wales and in India as well as in Ireland. He thought the opposion of the lords to the Gladstone bill will be ephemeral, and that the voice of the British people will ultimately have its effect. In this connection it is worth noting that at a meeting of Scotchmen held in Edinburgh last month it was resolved to memoralize Mr. Gladstone to consider the interests of Scotland and so adjust the home rule problem as to grant each division of the United Kingdom a local legislature and executive for the management of its own affairs, all four divisions to be represented in an imperial parliament at Westminster.--The Irish Standard.

County Cullings.

Buffalo seems to be having her full share of calamities this season. On Thursday last a severe hail storm visited it, knocking out windows and injuring gardens, and in the neighborhood striping the corn stalks of their blades and ears.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

LUCK.

"If the face in the moon
Wear a frown—alas,
Luck will be poor till the month shall pass;
If the face in the moon
Wear a smile—why, then,
Luck will be good, till it frown again."

So runs a verse
That I used to say:
I have learned it, since,
In another way:

"If a face be marred
By a frown—alas,
Luck will be poor till the frown shall pass;
If a face be bright
With a smile—why, then,
Luck will be good till it frown again."

If the first be true
'Twould be hard to say;
But the last, if you will,
You can prove, each day.

—H. R. Hudson.

IT seems Ignatius Donnelly is as anxious as ever to have the legislature of Minnesota in continuous session. He now wants an extra session. He is a great friend of the unemployed.

A MEETING of the unemployed was held at St. Paul on Saturday evening. I Donnelly, J. Ham Davidson, James Burnes, Mathias Bantz, Edward Peterson are some of those mentioned as participating in the proceedings. We supposed they had jobs.

CONGRESS came to a vote on Monday, on the free coinage of silver at the present ratio of 16 to 1. Minnesota's seven Congressmen split up and were represented on all sides. Boen, the Populist voted yes: Baldwin and Hall, Democrats, and Fletcher, Kiefer and Tawney Republicans voted no; while McCleary was not on the list.

Moving the Crops.

How to procure money to move the crops seems to be taxing the brains of some of the speculators in grain and others. Various means have been suggested such as the combining of wheat buyers, millers and railroads and issuing certificates of small denominations to be accepted by them as money. The Hon. Edward Atkinson is said to have a plan whereby any large establishment of repute would prepare a check book in even sums of $5 and $10 which checks would pass in the town where the firm is known as money. The Eagle suggests that other larger cities might follow the plan of the Fargo, N. D. banks and issue clearing house certificates, for the purpose. The object of all these plans seems to be the "moving of the crops." The buying of the farmer's wheat at less than 50 cents a bushel, and storing it in the elevator where the grain dealer can hold it for a rise. Thereby helping the farmer dispose of what wheat he can spare at once, for the lowest price in years and taking the note of some supposed wealthy individual, firm or corporation, which as a matter of fact is as apt, or more so to pieces any day as the farmer is even if he holds his wheat in his own granary, until better prices are paid which is bound to be the case when the grain is actually needed for consumption. If these monied men were not pretty sure of making something by buying grain at present prices they would not be so anxious to "move the crops."

Suppose the farmer should issue his own notes, bearing no interest, in sums of $5 or $10 or any other number of dollars he sees fit, and pay his debts and buy what few things he is actually in need of, while he leaves his grain in his own bin, and runs the risk the grain buyers are so anxious to assume for him, of having the price higher and paid in lawful currency in the near future, would he not be doing better than he would by selling it it for some other fellows check, certificate, note, or whatever he may choose to call it? Is not the farmer's note today a little nearer gilt-edged than the note of almost any of our business men? And would not his "currency" be just as good? Now is the time for the Populist to issue money on a small scale, for trial, backed up by the wheat in his bins. We hope none of these plans will have to be resorted to. That other means more in keeping with the principles of a sound currency, good anywhere, will be brought about by our national government soon. But if it is necessary to have every man in business, be his own banker and issue his own currency, give the Farmer an equal show with the rest.

How it Can be Done.

This talk of 30,000 or 40,000 plurality for Gov. McKinley this fall is all poppycock. And still one can hear it anywhere he can go. But the man who talks that way shows how ignorant he is of Ohio politics. When Ohio Republicans have stood on the corners and boasted that we were going to sweep the state like a prairie fire, somebody has usually been disappointed. Not that it couldn't have been done, for it could. It was the simplest thing in the world to roll up 30,000, or even 50,000 plurality against a dummy ticker, like the present Democratic one, but the Ohio Republican didn't do it because he was lazy—purely lazy, and preferred to stay at home rather than go to the polls. That's the whole secret. If the men who are opposed to all the sham and hollow mockery in what is known as the Democratic administration, and opposed to the present state of affairs, could be placed in line on election day and voted, Mr. Neal Would not care to have his vote counted. Fifty thousand for McKinley would be the easiest thing in the world.

But will he get it?

We are afraid not.

Why?

Because the Republican party of Ohio is too often the willing and easy victim of Over-Confidence, with a large O and a big C.

With O. C. actively at work, as it is now, a possible margin of 50,000 is easily cut down to 15,000.

There should be one cry from this on "Get out the vote!" That is how it can be done, and Mr. McKinley be elected by 50,000 plurality.—Toledo Blade.

This don't look as if Ohio Republicans are very sure about McKinley and protection after all. They must, judging from the above article have a terrible lazy and indifferent set of Republicans in Ohio. Perhaps they do need protection.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 25, 1893.

In addition to the silver debate in the House this week, which has been unusually interesting, two great financial speeches were made by democratic Senators, one by Senator Voorhees, on Tuesday, and the other by Senator Hill, to-day. Both on the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman silver law as the best method of preparing the way for other legislation dealing with silver as money.

There was a sharp debate in the Senate this week, for a few minutes, over the question of whether a resolution offered by Senator Peffer, enquiring of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the action of national banks in large cities in refusing to cash upon presentation checks of depositors, should be disposed of at once or be referred to the Finance committee. Trouble was avoided by a demand for the "regular order," which sent the resolution to the foot of the calendar, where it will have to await its turn, unless sooner taken up by a vote of the Senate. It is perfectly well known in Congress that the national banks of New York and other cities have been refusing to cash checks for their depositors, for one member of the House—Johnson, of Ohio—was refused the cash for a check for $200 at a New York bank in which his balance was more than $20,000, although it was given him after an interview with the president. Hints have also been received here that certain New York banks have been profiting largely by the sale of currency at a premium, which has been going on in that city. It will not be surprising if there is some very plain talk in Congress about the national banking system as at present conducted before long Senator Voorhees devoted a part of his speech to it, and there will be others heard from as soon as finances get a little steadier.

Without disparagement to the democrats who held important committee chairmanships in the last House, it can be said that Speaker Crisp has in the new chairmen selected men who are generally credited with being peculiarly well fitted to perform the duties with which they have been intrusted. Hon. W. L. Wilson, of West Virginia, the new chairman of the Ways and Means committee, has been a student and advocate of tariff reform not only since he has been a member of the House but also long before he entered public life. He is thoroughly master of the subject, and the tariff bill, upon which his committee will at once get to work, promises to be a moddle of its kind. Hon. Joseph S. Sayers, of Texas, the chairman of the committee on Appropriations, has been a prominent member of that committee for years, and no higher praise can be given his abilities than to say that he has long been spoken of as the Sam Randall of that committee, in his methods of work and instantaneous grasping of the salient points of all subjects that come before the committee. Mr. Springer, of Illinois, who was chairman of the Ways and Means committee in the last House, is now at the head of the committee on Banking and Currency, which will play no small part in the present House, and Mr. Holman, who was chairman of the committee on Indian Affairs, where his work will be much lighter, a consideration that his age made important. The number of disappointments is much smaller than usual.

By joint resolution of Congress the provisions of the law providing for town site entries of land in Oklahoma have been extended to the Cherokee outlet, which is to be opened to settlement at noon on September 16.

Commissioner Loehren has no objection to the carrying out of the latest republican threat of applying to the courts for an injunction to prevent his suspending pensioners whose right to be on the rolls he believes to be questionable.

There has been some talk this week about the probability of the extra session coming to a close before the first of October, but the most experienced legislators will not express an opinion as to the length of the session until something more definate is known about the probable length of time the Senate will take to dispose of the Voorhees bill for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law. The House will not be idle after it disposes of the repeal bill, as Representative Johnson's bill provides for an exchange of United States bonds for currency, at the option of the holder of the bonds, the interest on which will cease so long as the currency is retained, will probably be reported from the committee on Banking and Currency soon after the silver vote is taken, and the same committee may also report a bill for the repeal of the tax on State bank currency. But it may be decided to do nothing in the House until the Senate acts on silver. In that case the House will only meet every three days.

The Senate has decided against seating the appointed Senator, Lee Mantle, from Montana.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Farmers are busy threshing, plowing etc.

Corn will be ready to cut up in ten days or two weeks, the crop will be very good.

Wheat is turning out on an average of about ten bushels per acre. Some fields of oats went as high as fifty bushels per acre.

The potato crop will be light some of the farmers will hardly have enough for their own use, and if they are imported who pays the duty? The question is an easy one.

E. W. Mills is building the new school house in district 102.

Prof. Remmington spent Sunday in Independence.

W. H. Kennedy expects to attend the World's Fair soon and also the G. A. R. Encampment at Indianapolis the 4th of September.

The great cry is hard times and no money. So say we all. But from whence cometh these hard times and depression in money matters was it from the farmer, the laborer, or the money changers? I have looked through Shakespeare and Blackstone and find they do not fortell of this crisis in the money market, neither do they give a solution of the matter.

A good many farmers will sow rye this fall. That is most always a good crop, and it can be used for either man or beast.

Frank Lucier and family, of Rockford, attended church at Armstrong Sunday.

Threshers do not stay long with the farmers this fall, the jobs are short.

Henry Fogleman has gone to Minneapolis for a few days.

Deadly Gas in a Well.

Eau Claire; Wis., Aug. 28.—The 10-year-old son of James Brown, late Saturday afternoon fell into a dry well and was overcome by gas. His mother missed him and went out doors with the baby in her arms to look for him, suspecting that he had fallen into the well, she laid her baby down and looked over the edge. The mother was also overcome by the effluvium and fell into the well. Meantime the attention of the neighbors was attracted by the baby, which had begun to cry. The mother was raised first with a rope. She was unconscious but was resuscitated. The boy was dead when taken out. The well had just been dug and is only 12 feet deep and where the gases come from is a mystery.—Pioneer Press.

The Cost of an Ex-president's Manuscript.

As an illustration of the money paid to writers as soon as they acquire a reputation, the September Cosmopolitan contains less than eight thousand words for which the sum of sixteen hundred and sixty six dollars was paid. Ex-President Harrison, Mark Twain and William Dean Howells are the three whose work comands much as price.

The September number has more than 100 illustrations, giving the chief points of interest in the Columbian Exposition, and the Fair is treated by more than a dozen authors, including the famous English novelists, Walter Besant; the Midway Plaisance, by Julian Hawthorn; Electricity, by Murat Halstead; the Liberal Arts Building, by Kunz the famous gem expert of Tiffany & Company, the Department of Mines, by the chief of that department, etcetera.

A feature of this number is a story by Mark Twain, entitled "Is He Living or Is He Dead?"

There never was a better man
Than Elder Simon Jones.
He reeked with goodness, even to
The morrow in his bones;
And he'd have been beatified
Long years ago I know,
But for his fatal tendency
To say: "I told you so."

No matter what might come to pass,
No shadow of surprise
Was ever seen by any one
In Elder Jones's eyes.
He'd simply listed to the tale
Of gladness and of woe,
And when it all was finished he'd Remark: "I told you so."

A most exasperating man,
The neighbors all agreed,
They never knew however good
He was in word and deed;
For when the most unlooked-for things
Had set them in aglow,
The stolid Jones would only nod
And say: "I told you so"

Well, finally the elder died,
As even good men must,
His mortal frame was laid away
To mingle with the dust.
But when his soul to judgment came,
Its course was turned below,
And all the angles shook their heads,
And sighed: "I told you so."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—

LATER NEWS.

THE storm that swept over New York and the East during the early morning hours of the 29th, was the most violent known for years. It had its origin in a cyclone that arose in the West Indies and then swept along the Atlantic coast in a northwesterly direction. Business between Chicago and New York was almost paralyzed. The great network of wires of the Western Union company suffered to an alarming extent. At Buffalo it was the worst since 1871. At Brooklyn thirteen houses in course of construction were blown down. At Sullivan Island, S. C., A. Bryan and wife were drowned and Mrs. E. Polland was killed by a falling tree. At Washington, D. C., trees were uprooted and telegraphic communication cut off. A special from Port Royal, S. C., brings the startling information that fully 100 lives have been lost at Port Royal, Beaufort, and neighboring points by drowning during the storm. Over 25 of these were seen by the correspondent, and his information regarding the others was received from reliable sources. Of the 100 persons killed and drowned, only eight were white, the others being negroes. The negroes were so frightened and terror-stricken that many were killed and drowned by not leaving their cabins to seek a place of safety. Twenty persons were drowned on Paris island. No news has been received from St. Helena, four miles from Beaufort.

THE men of the Louisville & Nashville system, from Cincinnati to New Orleans, have voted to strike against a reduction of pay.

A STORM'S WORK.

It Causes Great Damage to Property in Georgia, South Carolina and Florida—Several Lives Lost—Many Persons Missing.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Aug. 30.—This city presents a scene of desolation. Death and disaster have marked the path of the terrible cyclone which raged along the coast Sunday night. The ruin at quarantine is immeasurable. Nothing is standing where one of the finest stations on the South Atlantic was twenty-four hours ago except the doctor's house, and how this weathered the fearful gale is miraculous. The wharves are gone, the new fumigating plant which has cost the city so much money is in the bottom of the sea, and nine vessels which were waiting there for release to come to the city are high and dry in the marsh and no doubt will be total wrecks. The Cosnine was the only vessel which managed to keep afloat.

The tug Paulson arrived in the city at 5 o'clock Monday afternoon. It brought up sixty passengers from Tybee. Mr. Revers, one of them, said four negroes engaged in clearing the railroad tracks were drowned. A sailor and the cabin boy on the schooner Harold, which is on its side on North beach, drowned. It is reported that eight of the crew of a terrapin sloop which went ashore on the South end were drowned.

A view of this city at daylight Monday morning revealed a scene of wreck and ruin that surpassed that after the great hurricane of 1881. The streets were impassable from the debris, fallen trees, twisted roots, masses of brick fences and broken branches of trees were piled across the sidewalks and in the square and broken wire strewn in every direction.

The list of fatalities is gradually growing and it is impossible to tell to what extent it will go. Several bodies of drowned persons were picked up during the morning and searches are now being made for others which are missing. Every hour seems to bring some new story of a death as a result of the storm. The drowning of A. C. Ulmer, assistant cashier of the Central railroad bank on Hutchinson's island, was one of the most unfortunate fatalities of the storm.

The other fatalities so far reported are as follows:

Tony Holmes (colored) crushed in a house on Hutchinson's island; four unknown negroes drowned on the Bramptons plantation 4 miles from the city; Lewis Garnett (colored) ran into a live trolley wire; Tattler Squire, a 6-year-old colored boy, drowned on Hutchinson's island; John Williams, Mary Butler and Sarah Greene, drowned on a rice plantation south of the city.

There are forty to fifty other persons who are reported missing, and it is supposed, as nothing has been heard from them, that their bodies will be found later. Twelve barks and barkentines which were anchored at quarantine station were blown high and dry upon the marsh and some of them were carried by the storm across the marshes on to an island 2 miles distant from the station.

RALEIGH, N. C., Aug. 30.—The town of Kernsville was struck by a terrific windstorm Monday. One hundred houses were blown down and four persons killed.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Aug. 30.—All the South Atlantic coast as far as can be ascertained from this wrecked point, with much of the interior, has been swept by the West India hurricane which has been playing such havoc for several days. The wires are down everywhere, buried beneath ruins, and information is meager. The fury of the hurricane is unexampled in interior Carolina. For eight or ten hours the hurricane held the country relentlessly in its clutches, and men and beasts alike were powerless to contend against the surging war of the elements. Hundreds of lofty trees were ruthlessly torn from their roots. Houses and other property went the same way.

All were just beginning to hope for better times in the fall, notwithstanding the financial crisis, when this storm came. Now the crops are wiped away and with them the hopes of the farmers. The crops have been mowed in the fields and the poor people, with money scarce, are going to have great difficulty in recovering from the shock. The loss is over 40 per cent. of the entire crops.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Aug. 30.—This city has been cut off from communication with the outside world since 3 o'clock Sunday morning. In this city the velocity of the wind was 38 miles per hour. Hundreds of trees were blown down and signs disapeared before the gale. Scores of dwellings and public buildings were entirely or partly unroofed, causing great damage from the rain, which fell in torrents.

St. Augustine reports the water coming in over the sea wall and damaging business blocks. Linn hotel was unroofed and badly drenched. About thirty or forty yachts and small craft were badly damaged or completely destroyed. The fate of other localities in Florida as well as of the south side territory invaded by the storm is still a sealed book. The wires are down in every direction from Jacksonville.

FORT WORTH, Tex., Aug 30.—A local cyclonic storm Sunday blew down a small church on Stratton's ranch, 4 miles from Cleburne, and wounded twenty-one persons, broken limbs being the most serious injuries.

ATTACKED A STORE.

An Unruly Mob in Chicago Marches on the Big Establishment of Siegel, Cooper & Co., but Is Routed at the Doors by Police.

CHICAGO, Aug. 30.—Chicago witnessed on Monday the nearest approach to the looting of one of its great department stores, that of Siegel, Cooper & Co., that has ever taken place in the history of the city. The store was saved from being raided by the presence, the active and efficient work done by Chief of Detectives John Shea and Assistant Chief of Police Joseph Kipley.

The movement on State street was one of those extraordinary things which unorganized mobs sometimes do. It had no leaders and seemingly had no purpose except a wild desire for action on the part of the men who had been standing quietly for hours listening to speeches in almost every modern language.

The trouble began from the moment when Assistant Chief Kipley notified the leaders of the mass-meeting that no more street parades would be tolerated. Angry howls greeted this announcement from the stand. Several speakers advocated parading the streets despite the police orders.

Some one called out, "Where's the black flag?" "Black flag! black flag!" reechoed the crowd, but it was not forthcoming. It had been in the crowd at the statue during the afternoon but was not unfurled. The crowd filled the street from curb to curb. Fruit stands were run over but not plundered. Light vehicles were jerked about in a spirit of viciousness. The crowd was swiftly becoming a mob. It was nearing the danger line.

A short distance south of Van Buren the mob was startled and thrilled by a voice in clear, loud tones: "Siegel & Cooper," "Siegel & Cooper," "On to Siegel & Cooper's!" The mob had its cue. Men's faces whitened, their hands instinctively clinched, and on the double-quick they started for the great main entrance to Siegel & Cooper's. A roar of mingled voices filled the street. It grew in volume. It sounded like a storm. The mob had reached the sidewalk immediately fronting the entrance. Then the police sprang in. The detectives, who were almost without exception veterans who have fought through many a street fight, went in on that crowd and through it very swiftly. They used only their hands and chiefly pulled the men about, but in those cases where resistance was made the hand was doubled and put into action.

Inside the store a panic was about to ensue. The great mob was seen rolling rapidly to the entrance. Clerks' faces blanched. Customers eagerly hurried to escape down aisles to the north and south exits. It was bargain day and the great store was jammed with women, young and old, on their shopping trips. They could not hurry out. Harrison street station was telephoned for help.

Before the crowd on the outside had time to do any mischief Assistant Superintendent Kipley and Inspector Shea swooped down at the head of thirty or forty officers in plain clothes. In less than five minutes the mob was flying in all directions, pursued by the officers, who kicked and thumped the surprised beligerents with remarkable zest and vigor. Several thousand spectators were attracted to the scene and State street for blocks was black with people.

Inspector Shea kept his officers busy moving the crowds, and after half an hour's turmoil the excitement died out and business went on as usual. No arrests were made, the police acting so promptly that neither the ringleaders nor their followers had time to do any actual harm, even if they were so inclined.

THEIR CRIME CONFESSED.

Arrest of the Four Men Who Attacked and Murdered Henry Helmick.

DANVILLE, Ill., Aug. 30.—The four murderers of Henry Helmick were arrested Sunday night, and are Charles Harris, a fresco painter, 17 years old; Edas McJunkins, coal miner, 18 years; Harve Pate, laborer, 21 years, and Frank Starr, coal miner, 20 years. They are all residents of Danville. Pate at one time was a hand on Helmick's farm, and knew that Helmick carried large sums of money on his person. He induced the other three, at a conference held at Two Oaks saloon in this city, to walk 16 miles into the country for the express purpose of robbing Helmick. Three shots were fired by Pate and one by Starr. Harris has confessed, and overwhelming corroborating evidence is being accumulated.

LYNCHED FOR KILLING A BOY.

Summary Punishment of a Negro at Newcastle, Ky., by a Masked Mob.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Aug. 30.—Between 1 and 2 o'clock Monday morning thirty horsemen rode into Newcastle, Ky., and waking up Jailer Head told him they had a prisoner. When Head appeared with the keys the visitors, most of whom were masked, overpowered him and let themselves into the jail. They were after a negro named Leonard Taylor. Securing their man they took him about a quarter of a mile out on the road to Franklinton and hanged him to a tree. Taylor's crime was an unprovoked assault upon an Italian boy peddler a week ago. The negro struck the boy over the head, fracturing his skull and causing his death.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime, and read the Label.

RECRUIT AND CORPORAL.

BY GEORGE I. PUTNAM.

[Copyright, 1893, by the Author.]

BETWEEN Corporal Bond and Private Myers the relations were strained. This was an unfortunate condition. On the face of it, it seemed that the corporal had taken an instinctive dislike to the new man; for Myers was a recruit, and had not had time to create either pronounced friendships or antagonisms. But Corporal Bond, who was a soldier from love of it, and whose chief pride was in the daring efficiency of the old regiment, did not reckon from instinct alone. He observed that Private Myers accepted the petty annoyances attendant upon joining with a meekness that was not becoming. He had even shown no disposition to fight when he found his blanket knotted rope-wise. This, Corporal Bond argued, could be true of only a mean-spirited creature. He was sorry such a recruit had gotten into the regiment, but being there he must be educated up to the regiment's standard. This Corporal Bond regarded as his own mission; he set himself apart for it, and devoted himself to it. And he proceeded to develop the military essentials of the weak nature by "deviling" the unfortunate Myers at all hours, thereby indicating to him the necessity of a fight. And the two men did not love each other.

"I don't care for these peace soldiers myself—these chaps that get into the army for the sake of board, clothes and lodgings," said the corporal. "A man don't eat much unless he's hungry, but a soldier should always have a stomach for fighting. That is what he's here for." Then he would try to work up a proper appetite on the part of Private Myers; but his efforts did not meet with the success he longed for.

One stinging mid-winter day the guard detail from H company included both Corporal Bond and Private Myers. The first sergeant, being busy with the monthly returns, was excused from marching on the detail at guard mounting, and that duty fell to Corporal Bond. After performing this slight function, he would take his place in the line of file-closers and become himself a member of the guard. He was careful to inform himself of the position of the detail in line; and then indicated to Private Myers his particular place.

To the superficial eye of the adjutant, shivering in front of the line and devoutly wishing the ceremony was over, the disposition of the detail seemed to have been made with due regard for symmetry in "sizing up." But when the guard had been marched to its post and had been told off into reliefs it was found that Private Myers had post No. 3 of the second relief. The older soldiers, chuckling at their own escape, grinned anticipatively at the idea of mild-mannered Myers suffering on that exposed beat. They were denied the satisfaction of knowing if Myers understood the situation, for he said nothing, did nothing that could be construed into an admission.

When the hour came for posting the second relief for its first tour of night duty, Corporal Bond assumed command of Private Myers, and relieved the old sentinel on No. 3; and while he wandered away by himself in the direction whence gleamed the far red lights of the guardhouse, the corporal remained to instill into the mind of Private Myers a wholesome fear of the perils of his calling on that particular occasion.

"You know the limits of your post at night," said he. "From the corner of the ordnance storehouse around to the lower end of the corral, along the bank of the cut. It's a nasty place, and you'll have to keep your eyes open, Myers. A man that's no more of a scrapper than you are could be killed twenty times over along the cut; a belt over your head, a knife under your chin, and then you go tumbling down into the waterway. There's plenty would do it, too, for the sake of the stealing they could get on your post. I'm telling you this for your own good.

"There's the wood-yard. Those sticks would make handy weapons for a man creeping up behind you. Cord-wood costs money, too, out here. Government can afford it, but folks can't. If they get any at all, they steal it, and they don't object to a little thing like that. They are always hanging around, picking off billets here and there. It's a piece of your business to-night to stop that—to catch 'em or kill 'em—and they know it well as you do. They'll be keeping a sharp watch out for you in the dark corners.

"KEEP YOUR EYE PEELED."

"Got a cartridge in your piece? You are likely to need one. This ain't any play-soldiering, Myers; this post isn't any snap. You're earning your pay this night. It's a long dark beat, and a good step from any support. I'm most sorry it fell to you, for you ain't the man I'd choose for such a ticklish job. But don't get scared. All I say is, keep your eye peeled, or it'll be a dead sentinel I take off here in two hours!"

Private Myers shivered in his overcoat and wished himself far away. His sense of isolation became oppressive; the darkness harbored unknown dangers; thieves were lurking about; uncanny objects were ready to show themselves.

For Private Myers was a very new soldier, and could not bear a soldier's honors easily. In every way he was untried and unformed. A good, square, honest fellow, but with no force of character and little worldly experience, he had enlisted because that way lay an easy manner of life. His nature had nothing in common with soldiering; but as yet he did not know it. He was out of his element; but he did not know what his element was. Some day he might discover this, and thereafter do that to which his hand most naturally might turn. But now he was no more than a man in embryo, the butt of all the wags in barracks, accepting these rather hard conditions with humility because he did not know what else to do. His life was hard, but a redeeming feature was that he himself did not know how hard it really was.

With a sudden accession of courage he marched to the head of his beat. As he went, something white fluttered into sight between him and the moon, and then wavered into the black depths of the cut. Again his courage forsook him, and he threw forward his rifle ready to fire; but the whiteness was lost, and he was unharmed. He threw open the chamber of his gun with a bold movement and took out the cartridge.

He knew a shot would bring the men from the guard-house, and he did not want to turn them out for a trifle. He would cut a very poor figure before them under such circumstances. Somewhat nearer than the guard-house was the cottage in which Corporal Bond lived. Women-folks were there, and they would be frightened by the discharge. It was better to take an additional risk of danger than to be the joke of the garrison for a week over a false alarm.

He approached the hay-yard. The wind was rising, and was like an ice-pressure against his face. It wailed yet more and more dismally. He stopped to listen, not at all certain it was the wind, and that only, that he heard. There was a quality in it such as he had never heard before. It was short-lived and intermittent, and not at all like sounds usually produced by the lungs of night. He walked quickly among the bales of hay, and nearly fell over the origin of the strange sound. He picked it up and looked at it in the dim moonlight.

"SAY, KID, WHO ARE YOU?"

"White, eh? How the deuce did the child get here?" he demanded of himself. "Say, kid, who are you?"

But the child was crying too steadily to admit of its doing anything else. It had probably been asleep, and now, barely awake, was frightened by unwonted surroundings. It was cold, too. Myers could not get a rational reply. The child simply clung to him, and cried with a loud voice. To Myers mind it drowned all other sounds, and he wondered that the guard did not come down and see what had occurred on post No. 3.

Private Myers was not enough of a soldier to alarm the guard. He was too much of a soldier to leave his post and run with the child to the cottage of Corporal Bond, but a few rods away. What he did was to strip off his overcoat, wrap the child in, and talk in a roughly comforting way. Presently he made a hollow space among the bales, sheltered from the wind, and warm. In it he put the quieted child, pulling another bale over the nest; and the child went to sleep, like the vigorous healthy little animal that it was.

Myers recommenced patrolling his beat. The wind continued to rise, and it was increasingly cold. It cut like knives through his blouse. Some of the time Myers ran, to beat off the cold.

The officer of the guard came stumbling sleepily about on a tour of inspection. "All right on your post?" he demanded.

"All right, sir."

"Very foolish of you not to wear an overcoat. You're likely to get pneumonia," said the officer.

The sentinel made no reply. The remark had been unofficial, and did not require any.

At the end of two weary hours, Corporal Bond came down to relieve the sentinel. He had been warm and comfortable in the guardhouse, and was possibly in a little worse humor at having to turn out for so trifling a duty.

"Still alive, eh?" said he. "Well, I didn't expect it. I see they took your overcoat, though."

"No, they didn't. I've got it down here," said Myers. He went to the place, and picked it up tenderly.

"The more fool you for not wearing it," growled the corporal. "Why, what have you got in it?"

"Just a kid I found down here crying."

Corporal Bond looked at the sleeping child and gave a little start as of surprise. "Well, I swear!" said he. But he didn't.

They marched together without another word from the lower end of the beat and passed the corporal's set of quarters. Suddenly the corporal stopped.

"I'll take the kid," said he. And then he held out a hand in a friendly way. "We might shake," he ventured.

Myers was carrying the child close to his breast with a warm feeling of tender possession. He did not fancy letting the corporal take the helpless charge from him and spoke with unusual resentment.

"I'll keep the kid for to-night," said he, sturdily. "I found it, and I'll take care of it—till somebody claims it. And I don't know any reason why we should shake hands. We haven't had any occasion to, so far."

"Well," said the corporal, "I thought I'd like to because—because I seem to have made a mistake in sizing you up. I'm willing to admit my fault. But it's just as you say."

"Oh, that's it, eh?" said Myers. "Well, here's my hand. Shake and shake hearty. And, by the way, the kid here; you've got women-folk, and they can take care of it better than I can—just for to-night. You know whose it is?"

"Yes," said Corporal Bond. "It's mine."

—In Pennsylvania, women belonging to the Protestant Episcopal church not only vote for vestrymen, but are elected to that office.

—The Lord's Day union has been organized in India. It was suggested by our Rev. F. W. Warne, of Calcutta, and is designed to agitate in favor of Sunday observance.

—Mrs. George William Curtis has established a free scholarship fund in memory of her husband in the Staten Island academy. It is the proceeds of the edition of "Prue and I," published last Christmas.

—A bill providing for freedom of public worship has been introduced in the Hungarian parliament. It concedes the right of everyone to choose the form of religion each may prefer. Its practice, within the requirements of public order and morality, is guaranteed.

—In one hundred and seventy years after the death of Christ the whole Bible had been translated into Latin by some unknown author into what is now known as the old italic version. By the year 200 it was extant in Greek, Syriac and Latin, and by the ninth century in thirteen languages.

—A conference has been suggested of Congregationalists, Christian or Disciples, and Free Baptists, to propose a basis for a practical alliance between the three denominations, the proposed basis to be submitted to the representative bodies of each denomination for discussion and possible ratification.

—Rev. Dr. E. R. Knowles, of Worcester, Mass., has declined a request to take charge of the Gallican church in Paris, from which Pere Hyacinthe has retired. As the church is now in the jurisdiction of the archbishop of Utrecht Father Hyacinthe can not longer act as rector, because he married after his ordination to the priesthood.

—The Massachusetts Home Missionary society last year received $152,586. Of this amount $54,820 came from the Swett fund, and $97,766 from all other funds. There were sent to the American Home Missionary society in New York $173,460; $76,689 of this through the Massachusetts society, and $98,941 direct. There was spent in home mission in Massachusetts $68,543.—Christian at Work.

—Application has been made to the World's Gospel union for an envangelist under the following conditions; A small country church in Illinois has begun to plan for special revival work the coming fall. They are now praying earnestly that God may send them a chosen worker as an evangelist at that time, and one of the workers has given ten members of the Ladies' Missionary society a pig each. These women are to take in washing, sweep the schoolhouses, etc., to get corn to fatten the pigs, and in the fall the pigs will be sold and the money used to pay the evangelist.

HIS PREDICAMENT.

This Young Man Was in a Peck of Trouble Through No Fault of His Own.

There is a certain young man in Chicago whose natural propensity for being agreeable has sometimes placed him in embarrassing positions. He has not quite recovered from his latest shock.

Two weeks ago he decided to accept an invitation to a certain club reception. A young lady from the far south side was to accompany him.

That evening when he called at her father's door the young lady was indisposed. A female cousin happened to be spending the evening at the house, and being an old friend the young man was ushered into the family sitting-room and introduced to the cousin, whom he had never seen. Naturally enough he didn't catch her name on presentation, and naturally enough, too, he proposed that she go with him to the reception.

Five minutes after the introduction she withdrew to get ready. When she came out prepared to keep out of the cold she seemed only an animated bundle of wraps.

It was this animated bundle which a few moment later retired to the club dressing room set aside for ladies. She came out metamorphosed beyond all hope of identification at the end of ten minutes. Introductions to three or four other ladies, had in the meantime tended to still further bewilder the young men, and he stood with a cold, clammy sweat on his thoughtful brow.

What a situation! The escort of a young lady whose name he couldn't call and whose face he couldn't remember! And there were half a hundred of faces about the rooms.

Twice in the course of the evening he thought he had found the young lady. Each time he spoke guardedly about her "sick cousin," and each time the young lady gave him a scarec look, as if she doubted his sanity.

It was not she.

The evening dragged on somehow. He thought several times of running away—somewhere — anywhere — and never being heard of more. Then a happy thought struck him. It gave him new hope of life.

People began to go home after a time. The crowd thinned and the young man watched hopefully.

Six women were left—five—four—three—

Two!

And one other young man!

Then the other young man took the arm of the tall young woman who was smiling so graciously about her, leaving a sober-faced, demure little woman buttoning her left hand glove.

And then, with a great feeling of thankfulness in his heart, the first young man went forward and without a word took the arm of a Dead Certainty!—Chicago Record.

The Ungrammatical Potato.

"Why do they call it the early rose potato?" inquired the sweet young member of the cooking class.

"Because that is its name," responded the teacher, smilingly.

"Yes, I know, but they might have been grammatical, and called it the early rising," she said, as she dumped a spoonful of yeast into a batch of dough.—Detroit Free Press

A GOOD RING OR NONE.

There Is Peril in Having a Poor Stone in an Engagement Solitaire.

"What a beautiful ring!" a young lady exclaimed, admiringly, to her brother the other day. "You might let me wear it! I don't see what you are carrying it for. You never put it on."

"Well," the young man replied, "you see I'm thinking of putting it on some one. I've noticed if you can once get an exquisite ring on a girl's hand you can usually get the girl. There's a personality about a ring someway that does not cling to any other article of jewelry, and it has quite a mysterious power over the one that wears it."

The sister laughed maliciously.

"I think you will find there are several things about a ring apart from the personality of its owner that may influence the wearer," she said; "its price, for instance."

"You do not understand at all," he explained. "Suppose, for instance, I offer a diamond ring to a young lady. I have gone into a jewelry store and bought the biggest diamond I could find, and then want to give it to a young woman who knows as clearly the difference between a yellow diamond and a steely white one as you do between a Worth dress and one made in a slop shop. It may not have shown so plainly at night when she slipped it on, and it looked big and bright, and she did not care to examine it very closely; but wait until daylight. Then, as she turns it around on her slender finger, she sees its yellow color, its old-fashioned setting and the "feather" in its heart, and, sensible girl that she is, all these things set her thinking. That old setting startles her. She can't help wondering how long ago 'George' bought the ring, and if some other maid has worn it before it came to her. Then its size! Everyone will notice it, and of course everyone must see it is not a perfect stone. There is that ugly flaw nestling away down in its heart. George had said the ring was an emblem of his love. She knew he meant unending and precious, but now she wonders if there is a flaw, too, in his love—if time will prove him as daylight has the ring, not half so precious as he first seemed. In the end it is a very discontented and worried girl the ring's owner has to face when he calls that night, and he has only himself to thank if he gets the ring back entirely. It's my own opinion," the youth concluded sagely, "that many an engagement is broken because of so small a thing as the engagement ring."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

HE WAS WELL FIXED.

A Candidate for Honors Among the Wall Street Magnates.

Before me on a western road sat two admirable specimens of the genus "hayseed." They were garrulous old chaps and talked and chewed tobacco as a school girl chews gum.

"I reckon we'll lose Ben Gross afore long," said one, branching off on a fresh topic.

"Eh?"

"Yaas—'t won't s'prise me a bit of Ben goes to New York an' speckelates."

"No; you don't say Ben's a gittin' 's rich 's that!"

"Wall, I guess he's 'bout the best fixed man in our place now, since W. F. Simpkins died."

"Ye don't say! How much d'ye s'pose Ben's worth now, biled down?"

"Wall, ye kaint jest tell. I know o' my own sartin knowledge he has over forty-five dollars in the bank an' his crop o' taters ain't dug yit. They'll bring him in right smart o' cash."

"Ge whiz!"

"Yaas—an' John Summers owes him three dollars and seventy-five cents on that old game of poker yit. He's slow, but he's good fer it, I guess."

The other was silent for some time, evidently ruminating upon such vast wealth. Then he suddenly inquired:

"Wat's he goin' to monkey with in New York?"

"I dunno. Wall street, like es not."—N. Y. Herald.

THE DAUGHTER OF WEALTH.

She Has a Power that Is Peculiarly Her Own.

How delightful it must be to be the only daughter of rich and doting parents. They toil not, but they spin in the airy intricacies of the modern dance with the springy lightness of a molecule of atmospheric ether. We consider ourselves quite witty in the presence of modest little Fanny, who has but two new dresses a year, and to whom a walk in the park with us is real ecstacy, but in the presence of the rich man's daughter we are humility itself.

Her wit is the rarest we have ever heard.

Her beauty is the finest we have ever seen.

We confess to her our follies, actuated by the hope that she may first pity, then embrace. We hardly dare to think of her as nestling in our arms. We glance timidly at her feet, which are much smaller than Fanny's, although she wears a larger shoe. If her seal-skin cloak brush our arm in the lobby of the theater we thrill with delight.

We are sure we could make her happy for life, if she would only marry us.

But, hang it—she won't.—Brooklyn Life.

Withering Irony.

A young woman of this city whose quick wit is responsible for the loss of a number of friends has just seen another retire from the list.

The young man was in a philosophical mood and remarked:

"Self-study is a bad thing."

"I shouldn't be surprised," she responded flippantly.

"Now, I am sure that if I were to devote time to thinking about myself I should become very narrow-minded."

"Oh, yes; you'd probably have to in order to grasp the subject."

And for the time he really felt as she had pictured him.—Washington Star.

Animal Intelligence.

Watts—I tell you, old man, I saw the most remarkable exhibition of animal intelligence to-day that could be imagined.

Potts—What was it?

Watts—A bridal party started from the house across the street from where I live, and one of the horses attached to the carriage threw a shoe. Now, what do you think of that?—Indianapolis Journal.

Why He Did So.

"Why did you tell Wearisome that you didn't have time enough to listen to his fish story?"

"I thought I had just as much right to tell a lie as he had."—Brooklyn Life.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Justice Blatchford's wealth was partly inherited. His father once lost $50,000, it is related, having set a valise containing that amount down in Fulton street, New York, to buy some peanuts and gone off forgetting it. But he was so wealthy that the loss did not hurt him much.

—Sir Leonard Tilley completed two years ago his second term as lieutenant-governor of New Brunswick and he is still serving because partisan politics there is very bitter and the government has avoided the danger of exciting the animosity of one faction by failing to select his successor.

—Mrs. Frederika Macdonald, a well-known English writer and lecturer, and Mrs. Annie Besant, who holds Mme. Blavatsky's scepter, engaged in a public disputation in London recently about the merits of theosophy and Buddhism. The debate resulted in a drawn battle, but was most interesting to the audience, as each disputant made an animated argument to support her thesis.

—Pierre Loti, who is about to start out on a tour to Egypt and Palestine, appears to be a great favorite with some of the feminine readers of his stories. In a lecture which she lately delivered about the novelist, Mme. Thenard said that "at receptions they overwhelmed him with adulation, and had he partaken of all the ices and wines they pressed on him he would have died ere this."

—It is the distinction of Rev. Mr. Blodgett, of Greenwich, Mass., that during his long pastorate of the village church there he has buried more people than the town contains. He has officiated at 624 funerals, while the entire popuiation of Greenwich at the present time is only about 570. Mr. Blodgett is seventy-eight years old, and for half a century he has been the town's only clergyman.

—There were great rejoicings among the pupils of M. Benjamin Constant upon his election to a membership in the French academy. A reception was given him at one studio by the men there, and a triumphal arch of roses and laurels was erected by his girl pupils in his studio in the Passage des Panoramas. Besides this, the staircase to the street was lined with young girls, each of whom held aloft a long spray of flowers or a palm branch as the painter descended, forming a floral canopy over his head.

—Colley Cibber was playing cards one evening. As the game went on, he did not follow suit, whereupon a testy old general cried out: "What, have you not a spade, Mr. Cibber?" The poet-laureate, nothing abashed, looked at his cards and answered: "Oh, yes, a thousand," a reply which drew forth a very short and peevish comment from the general. Colley, who was a very cool customer, and was, besides, "shockingly addicted to swearing," as the narrative says, retorted with "Don't be angry, general, for, damme, I can play ten times worse if I like."

—The prince of Wales not long ago was one of a large house-party, his host being a very well-known peer. After dinner, the royal guest, the host, and the other male visitors repaired to the billard-room. On a table at the side were two or three boxes of cigars, and the prince was helping himself to one, when an ambitious millionaire approached him, and taking from his pocket a cigar-case, held it out to the prince, saying: "I think, sir, you will find these better." "Mr. ——," replied the prince, "if a man's dinner is good enough for me, his cigars are good enough for me." The millionaire was unexpectedly called away to town next morning on business.

Why last evening I couldn't find my gloves, and I had a long hunt for half-a-dozen other things, and yet when I was finally dressed and went down stairs to my husband, there he was by the fire reading and smoking as calmly as if I wasn't half an hour late. Friend—"Well, I declare! Where were you going?" Young Wife—"To prayer-meeting."—Buffalo Commercial.

WAS A GREAT SCHEME.

The Doll-Carriers Proved Champion Fighters Themselves.

Two small boys walked up Connecticut street the other afternoon. They were rosy-cheeked young fellows, each about thirteen years old. One of them carried a big doll in his arms and the other pushed a doll's carriage in which reposed a much-dilapidated china doll. They walked along quietly, changing with each other. Just as they reached the corner of West avenue three other small boys saw them. They ran out to the street and the freckled-faced leader of the small gang sneered: "Aw, gid-don ter de kids."

"Hully Gee!" said the barefooted boy, "dey's carryin' dolls.

"Dey's doin' whad?" asked the boy with the straw hat in blank amazement.

"Carryin' dolls," repeated the barefooted boy.

"Let's swipe 'em," said all three at once.

The West avenue boys advanced rapidly upon the two boys with the dolls, and the freckled-faced boy hit the boy with the rag doll in his arms with a stick he carried in his hand.

"What are you doing?" inquired the boy with the rag doll.

"Aw, I'm hittin' ye, see? Whadju goin' t' de erbout it?"

The two boys with dolls walked on slowly. The freckled-faced boy hit the boy with the rag doll again. "Whadju goin' t' do erbout it? he taunted again.

The boy with the rag doll stopped, as did his companion.

They laid down their dolls carefully on the curbstone. Then the boy who had had the rag doll ran up to the boy with the freckled face and hit him a straight, hard blow in the face. The freckled-face youth was a bit rattled, but he soon gathered himself together and shouted, "come on, fellers!" and in less than two seconds there was the prettiest kind of a mix on the sidewalk. The two boys stood shoulder to shoulder and fought like miniature Sullivans. It was but a very short time until the three West avenue boys had enough. They turned and ran down the street, first firing a few stones at the victorious doll carriers. The other boys picked up their dolls and walked slowly along.

"Say, Jimmy," said the boy with the rag doll, "it's a bully scheme, ain't it?"

"Betcher life!" rejoined Jimmy, enthusiastically. If we carry those dolls a few days longer there won't be a blamed kid on the street we ain't licked."—Buffalo Express.

If You Had a Friend

Tormented with dyspepsia, you could not give him better advice than to adopt and stick to a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, finest and safest of tonics and regulators. This is no barren assertion. Experience has proved, physicians and the public certify to it. No less emphatic is their indorsement of it as a remedy for malarial disease, constipation, rheumatism, kidney disease, gout and neuralgia. Use it with persistence.

"Ma," said a discouraged urchin, "I ain't going to school any more." "Why, dear?" tenderly inquired his mother. "Cause 'taint any use. I can never learn to spell. The teacher keeps changing the words every day."

Wonder if Jatjat Jit Singh's 300 wives were obliged to take his name, and if so, how much they took at a time.—Chicago Dispatch.

The True Laxative Principle

Of the plants used in manufacturing the pleasant remedy, Syrup of Figs, has a permanently beneficial effect on the human system, while the cheap vegetable extracts and mineral solutions, usually sold as medicines, are permanently injurious. Being well informed, you will use the true remedy only. Manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co.

"August Flower"

My wife suffered with indigestion and dyspepsia for years. Life became a burden to her. Physicians failed to give relief. After reading one of your books, I purchased a bottle of August Flower. It worked like a charm. My wife received immediate relief after taking the first dose. She was completely cured—now weighs 165 pounds, and can eat anything she desires without any deleterious results as was formerly the case. C. H. Dear, Prop'r Washington House, Washington, Va.

DELANO DIARY

—Old papers for sale at this office.

—Brick $8 per 1000 at John Coolen's.

—If you need lime, call on John Coolen. 27.

—If you want brick go to John Coolen's.

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

—Read the vote on the Wilson bill on the inside of this paper.

—The "Beccas" had a big time at city hall on Tuesday evening.

—Leo Eppel has procured a new bicycle and is ready to join the club.

—The mornings mail seemed to be of unusual dimensions. The new administration is in charge.

—The Eagle don't like the editors of the Buffalo Journal and the BUFFALO GAZETTE. Old maids are apt to be "man haters."

—Butternuts, hazelnuts, grapes, plums, and other good things are abundant this season and the boys are having fine times harvesting them.

—It seems as if a general store on Railroad avenue would pay. As it is any little thing needed in this line must be gone down town after.

—The wheat crop in this vicinity is about two-thirds of a good crop. Oats good. Corn excellent. Potatoes rather small and not many of them.

—Anything you desire to know concerning the the inside workings of the World's Fair—behind the curtains—ask Scientist Probst. Information free.

—The M. E. S. S. held a picnic at Lake Sarah yesterday. They invited the Presbyterian Sunday School and other friends and had a pleasant visit and a good time.

—The Misses Bauman have moved their dress making business into the Lohmiller building. The postoffice and M. A. O'Hair's law office occupy the building vacated by them.

—A story was circulated a few days ago that a large black bear had been seen or heard near the Presbyterian church. It seems the animal in question was an old black cow.

—In case some of our potato lovers are obliged to import a few bushels from Canada, owing to the short home crop this year, they will doubtless learn who pays the tariff.

—O. L. Billings is in receipt of a fine map of the United States through the courtesy of Senator Washburne. The Squire seems to have a string to just lots of useful and ornamental things down to the Capitol.

—A movement is on foot to organize a board of trade in Delano. This would appear to be a move in the right direction if it is run properly and not in the interests of those who love wealth more than fair dealing.

—A good job was done during the week on a culvert on the west side on the Woodland road. And the hill near Bocks has been put in shape for winter. But Railroad avenue from River to Second Street is still an abomination.

—C. J. Buckley and family are again domiciled in Delano. C. J. says he had a fine trip to England and return except the last night out was one of the big storms which destroyed many small boats. He appears better satisfied than ever to remain among us.

—It has been suggested to us by a patron of the Delano school, that as whoopingcough is quite prevalent in town measures should be taken to prevent it from being taken to school next Monday, there to be spread throughout the entire district. The teachers and Health officers will probably attend to the matter.

—The Long Lake correspondent in in the Eagle says, Prof. Kennedy visited that town the other day and the men about town had quite a discussion whether to "ride him out of town on a rail or simply give him notice that his presence was not desired." Had the rail project prepailed it would only have still further shown what kind of enemies he has.

—Dr. Fassett, of Rockford was a GAZETTE caller today. He looks well for a man of 76 years who has lectured on history, chronology, and phrophesy in a theological school at Mendota, Ill., putting in four hours a day, for the past two months. He has again taken up the practice of medicine at Rockford, where he has a big circuit.

—On Tuesday morning, Leslie Ball, who had been visiting Delano friends started home to Excelsior, on his bicycle. When about two and a half miles from town he met with a mishap, breaking the wheel and brusing himself on the arm and shoulder. He hired some live horses to haul him and his outfit back to town for repairs.

—It is claimed about town that there was a tie in the village council at their last meeting in regard to issuing saloon license to one of Delano's dealers, and that the President took the Iowa view of the matter, that Prohibition is no longer a test of Republicanism and broke the the tie in favor of securing to the village treasury the other $500. The minutes of the meeting do not show how the vote stood. Quite a slick way when the majority are ashamed.

—The Eagle says "Mr. Jos. Van Eman, who is probably a little over-zealous in the temperance cause intends, it is said, to bring action against the village council for issuing a license to Leonard Dedrick," etc., etc. Perhaps if Mr. V. was on the bonds of one of the "dealers" and wished the "dealer" to keep open for him on Sunday, and to allow his minor ward to procure beer by the bucketful occasionally "against the peace and dignity of the State of Minnesota and against the statute in such case made and provided," he too would be as willing as the "old bird" up street to wink at these doings "law or no law."

Personals.

Miss Stella Jacobs leaves tonight for Devils Lake.

I. P. Harvey, of Rockford, was a business visitor to Delano yesterday.

William Nimsick, of St. Paul, visited friends near the Polish church this week.

C. R. Carlton, of Inecpendence, is receiving a visit from his brother, of Minneapolis.

Jacob Horrch and daughter Hattie, of Independence, were doing business in Delano yesterday.

Will Gnptil, of Rockford was over Wednesday. He says he knows he is advertised to be married.

Mrs. Thomas Johnson and Kittie returned from a pleasant visit to Illinois friends and the World's Fair.

Prof. Jonson, of Rockford, was up on Sunday. He says bicycling beats horse back riding by a considerable.

Miss Chase and Miss Conover, of Minneapolis and Miss Conover of California came up to the Rebekah doings.

Miss Lydia Bunse, who has been visiting with Rev. Hilscher and family returned to her home at Paynesville yesterday.

John McGary, of Independence was up Tuesday. He says all the stories about him being anything else but a good stiff Democrat are manufactured out of whole cloth.

Notwithstanding reports to the contrary the President is said to be in good health according to Dr. Bryant's statement.

Washington, Aug. 30.—Congressman Baldwin today secured the appointment of Hon. J. L. Harwick as postmaster at Monticello, Wright connty, and J. D. Campbell, at Mahtow, Carlton county.—Globe.

Among those recently named as post masters in Wright county are Levi Cochran, Smith Lake; W. G. Young, Waverly. J. C. Nugent, Buffalo; L. W. Harwick, Monticello. Pensioner, John Yager, Waverly.

The Polish committee mentioned before who were coming to this country to start a beet sugar factory as spoken of by the Minneapolis Journal as follows; "They were met last evening by the affable Frank Grygla, who is a native of their own country. The visitors are Count H. Lubienski, of Warsaw; Prof. Emil Dunikowski and Rector Rev. Ludwig Kloss, both of Lemberg university." Perhaps some of the Poles sn this neighborhood could take some of our big beets down and interview them.

Perhaps we could get along with the Sherman act if someone would only repeal the calamity howler.—St. Paul News.

Gold imports since Jan. 1 now exceed gold exports and the exports of wheat during the last four weeks have been at the large rate of 270,000 bushels a year. It that demand keeps up we can't supply it, for we won't have an exportable surplus of one-half that amount.—Minneapolis Journal.

Washington, Aug. 30.—Congressman Hall will introduce a bill placing refined sugar and binding twine on the free list as soon as the present discusion of the rules ends. He will also re-introduce his bill limiting the amount of wearing apparel brought back from Europe free of duty to $100. —Globe.

A bushel of wheat, which contains about 90 per cent of solids, mostly nutrive elsments, isn't worth as much as a bushel of potatoes, which is over 90 per cent water. When it comes to such a pass that you can't trade wheat for water even up, pound for pound, it is time to cut down the acreage of this grain.—Litchfield Independent.

Now that the silver men have conceded that they will agree to change the coinage ratio between silver and gold, even to 20 to 1, we should be glad to be informed whether we would not be foolish to stop half way instead of increasing the amount of silver in the standard dollar to 100 cents worth. To raise the coinage ratio to 20 to 1, when the actual bullion ratio is nearer to 30 to 1, is simply temporizing. But the trouble is not to find or to fix the ratio between gold and silver—the markets of the world do that—but to keep it fixed.—Toledo Blade.

The editor of the Buffalo Journal, A. Y. Eaton, ate too much of that dog meat which was sent over there last week, and is now engaged in the pleasing tack of making faces at us, and hollering that we are another. We did not anticipate that so little a thing as that dog item would set the whole of Buffalo roaring, and set the editor of its organ a frothing and a barking at the mouth. But then if the good people of Buffalo will have patience he'll get over it, and assume the normal condition and become as harmless as usual for a dyspeptic crank to be.—Wright County Times.

The story is told of a young man who is the victim, of the cigarette habit that he heard that the manufacturers would give a bandsome present to the person returning 1,000 cigarette boxes. The young man by rigid economy in other lines managed to accumulate the desired number of boxes. He packed them carefully and expressed them to the firm with happy anticipations of the beautiful present he was to get for his trouble. Imagine his consternation when a few days later he received a response from the firm, and this is what it said: "Send us 1,000 more and we'll send you a coffin. -Ex.

Buffalo, Minn., Aug. 30.—Last evening James A. O'Laughlin shot and dangerously wounded John Marooney. It seems that Marooney went to O'Laughlin for the purpose of getting him and his brother to help him thresh and got into an altercation with them about a horse, and the O'Laughlin's pitched on to him with the intention of giving him a licking. but he was too much for both of them, and James A. O'Laughlin ran into the house and got his revolver and came out again and fired three shots at Marooney, who had by this time started home. One of the shots struck him in the back, tearing through the right lung and loaging in his chest. It was a 38 calibre and made an ugly wound, which it is thought will prove fatal. O'Laughlin is under arrest.—Globe.

John McGary, one of the solid Hennepin county farmers and an "old liner" was in Buffalo a short time Monday and we acknowledge a friendly call. Mr. McGary is one of the few farmers who does a good deal of reading and thinking on his own account and has a comprehensive knowledge of public affairs. It will be a great thing for this country when there a multitude more of intelligent citizens even though they should be democrats. An intelligent democrat is a good deal to be preferred over an ignorant republican or a biggotted populist or a hide bound prohibitionist, for when intelligence controls the affairs of this country, no matter what party is in power the government will not be far wrong. The trouble with the party in power is that it does not have any more intelligence amongst its voters than the law allows.—Buffalo Journal.

THE CRIPPLE.

Ah, me! ah, me! the cripple's life
Is fringed with deepest woe,
The thorns that throng his daily path,
None but the cripple know.
Then oh, let mercy's gentle voice
Soft o'er your heart-strings steal,
And listen with kind charity
To this, my sad appeal

I little thought, as time went by,
Misfortunes thick and fast,
Would o'er me fall, and make me go
A cripple to the last.
Such is my lot—wealth can't atone.
For loss of limbs to me;
A slip, a fall, the mischief's done—
Crippled now, as you see.

Then oh! turn not away from this,
My sorrowing appeal,
But let the voice of mercy sweet
Soft o'er your memories steal.
And this pure truth from Holy Writ
Shall be your true reward:
That whosoever helps the poor,
But lendeth to the Lord.

Remember, then, the Golden Rule—
An adage of ye olden time:
Think, my friend, how if in my place,
You'd bless the giver of a dime;
Reach in your pocket for your change
And help the cripple on—
It is a mite to you I know;
To me it's quite a sum.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

THE mayors of St. Paul and Minneapolis have each a Labor Bureau, for the purpose of finding work for the unemployed in their cities. If you need work of any kind write to Mayor Wright, St. Paul, or to Mayor Eustis of Minneapolis, and see what they will do for you.

PHIL M. SCHEIG, teller of the Bank of Minneapolis, left his post a few days since short from 15 to 20 thousand dollars. Bondsmen are good for ten thousand of it. He with his wife and mother-in-law visited Chicago, where he left them. They returned home but claim to know nothing of his whereabouts. Dr. E. F. and Carl P. two brothers of the missing man have been arrested in Minneapolis.

M. J. Bofferding, cashier of the same bank suicided by shooting himself in the head yesterday morning.

WHILE going from Minneapolis to St. Paul last Tuesday on an Inter Urban car we were reminded that this is a free country, by the appearance of a dapper young man, in his teens, coming on the car and seating himself beside a gray haired old gentleman, of perhaps 80 years, complaicently smoking a cigar that he had with him. The old gentleman, without saying a word climed passed the young man, and found a less pleasant seat next to the isle a couple of seats ahead of where the young man was puffing. Several ladies and others, of course noticed the actions of the two men. We are of opinion that the estimation in which that young man raised himself by sucking at a cigar on that occasion did not make up for the actual loss sustained.

Lochren's New Order.

Washington, Sept. 4.—Commissioner Lochren, of the pension office, has issued the following order:

The circular of June 12, 1893, in respect of rating cases under the act of June 27, 1890, is withdraw. Hereafter in affixing rates, the medical officer in the board of revision shall weigh each disability and determine the degree that each disability or the combined disabilities disables the claimant from earning a support by manual labor, and a rate corresponding to this degree shall be allowed. In cases in which the pensioner has reached the age of 75 his rate shall not be disturbed if he is receiving the maximum, and if he is a pensioner he shall receive the maximum for senility alone if there are no pensionable disabilities shown. —Minneapolis Jounrnal.

Iowa Prohibs.

Des Moins. Iowa, Sept. 6.—The Republicans who deem prohibition the most important political question before the people of Iowa held a state convention yesterday and parted company with the regular Republican party for the remainder of this campaign by nominating a candidate for governor and repudiating the liquor plank adopted at the August convention. Calvery Tabernacle contained 300 delegates and 1,500 visitors when the convention assembled. Rev. Emory Miller was made temporary chairman. At the afternoon session the temporary organisation was retained. The committee on credentials reported 60 out of 99 counties represented by 300 delegates to the number of 100 or more. Judge C. C. Nourse was chairman of the committee on resolutions, and reported a platform in which the following statement was made.

It is our purpose to repudiate in the most emphatic manner the doctrine to the local option or license or any other device by which the saloon may gain a legalized existance in Iowa.

The convention nominated L. S. Coffin, of Fort Dodge, for Governor, by acclamation. He has been prominent in the Republican party for many years.

McGary's Meditations.

INDEPENDENCE, Sept. 5.

EDITOR GAZETTE:

"The Kings of the earth sit themselves and the rulers take council together."

In Holy writ we read that perilous times shall come upon the earth and to a casual observer it would seem that they are now upon us.

But it is not only the United States (which happens at the present time to be goverened by a democratic admistration) that is, seeing hard times, but nearly the whole world.

But our political prognosticators pretend to interpet the cause of all this financial trouble by laying most of it to a democratic administration, but this can hardly account for it, for the laws on the statute books remain the same as when Harrison and the republican administration went out of power.

Soon after the inauguration of President Cleveland the air was rent with the cry from all over the country that the bottom had dropped out of every thing and there were perilous times upon us. such as we never had before, and yet the democrats had neither made or repealed any laws on the statute books.

What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?

In 1861 there was inaugurated in this country what some call a civil war, but it was a very bloody war nevertheless. For it took millions of treasures and the best blood of the nation to put it down. This was a sectional war.

The institution of slavery being the main or only cause of the southern states wishing to extend the slave territory in order to perpetuate their institution, but the north rightly said you have gone far enough and so hostilities began. It so happened in the course of human events that a large majority of the southern people were democrats, not because they were slave holders, but we presume from principle. And it seems that by many every since the war of the Rebellion, the word democrat has been interpreted to mean antagonistic to the government, but the south did not fight for the principles of democracy but to perpetuate the institution of slavery, and thereby many have become prejudiced against the word democracy. But had the Southern people been republicans they would have contended for their pet institution just the same for they said it is our property. When they attempted to go out of the Union and establish an independent government of their own the north says you can't and shant.

This was right in principle. Right here perhaps it would be well enough to mention the words of Henry Lloyd Garrison, while contending so earnestly for the abolition of slavery. He was so extravegant in his talk as to say the constitution of the United States was a covenant with death, a league with hell, and the flag a floating lie, because this country fostered the institution of slavery.

Thirty years have now paseed since the abolition of slavery and the war of the rebellion, and there are now other issues that confront us. On the 7th of August the President called congress together for the purpose of repealing the silver purchasing clause of the Sherman act. Yes to repeal that and to get something more deathly in its place. A gold standard, and thereby pauperize the poor and make this country a Lazar house. Who is it that is engaged in the missionary work in this conntry against free silver. The National Bankers Association, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, etc. They co-operate in the work of making gold the only legal tender. Who was it that called this mushroon congress? Was it the producer of agricultural products and the laboring class? No it was the shylocks of the country, for the purpose of getting a finer hold on the monetary system of this Government. Congress is how holding a post mortem examination on the financial affairs of this country, and it hardly seems they can diagnose the case.

Recently we have heard a goodeal about free trade England, cheap labor etc., and it was free trade that pauperized that country and most of this argument is visionary. In 1816, soon after the battle of Waterloo the Rothschilds had courier's watching the tide of the battle, and when it was over they hastened to London, and riding through the streets crying out "the armies of England are defeated." By this lie the Rothschilds bought up the bonds at half price, or less, and thereby gained their ascendency to the money power. And so now the banks of England and the Rothschilds dictate to the rest of the world what their monetary system shall be. We believe in the parity of the two metals, gold and silver, in the ratio prescribed by law, and that the government shall buy what gold and silver is necessary to coin into money for our needs and demand and no more, and the miners can dispose of the rest of their bullion, if they have any left, to whom they choose, or for what purpose they see fit. It does not follow because we have free silver that the government is compelled to buy all the silver that is mined in this country no more than they have to buy all the rags that the paper currency is made of. I notice in one of the papers a table showing the price of silver per ounce, and the price of wheat per bushel from Grant's second administration to Cleveland's second term. During Grant's second term silver was worth $1.32 per ounce, and wheat worth $1.24 per bushel, and now during Cleveland's second term silver is worth 70 cents per ounce and wheat 55 cents per bushel. Now can anyone tell how much there is in this to condemn a democratic administration. If this country buys silver bullion and coins it into silver dollars of 412½ grains and the government stamps on it saying its a dollar, good for all debts public and private, no matter what the silver in it may cost? Can anyone tell me the value of the paper in a five, ten or twenty dollar bill? Only for the stamp on the government and the faith on the nation its value would be worthless.

During, or after the war, at one time it took $2.85 of silver to buy one of gold, and at that time wheat brought as high as $2.50 to $3.00 per bushel. They said we had good times and that money was plentiful. Yes, but mind you the farmer had to pay gold prices for everything he bought. Calico 50 cents per yard cotton cloth 50 cents to $1 per yard. When we were getting $2.50 for wheat it was times when for one bushel of wheat we could buy 5 yards of calico, now when we get only 50 cents a bushel for wheat we can buy 7 yards of calico, but even this does not solve the problem. Nations as well as individuals are governed by circumstances. The little country of France has more gold and silver than any other nation. Silver is at par with gold in France and always has been, and so it would be in this country if it had not been demonetized in '73 and silver has not run gold out of France either. You can feed the people on highfaluten talk and spread eagle oratory, but what this country most needs is to be run through the crucible or refiner's fire that she may be separated from the dross and come out a shinning light to the rest of the the world as she claimed to be a century ago. It has been rumored that I have turned republican but would say have got hardly that far in political history, but I am open to conviction always, and in favor of the fair thing between man and man. Would say that I am independent of all political parties, and claim the privalege to have an opinion of my own, if it isn't worth much.

Yours in favor of Gold and Silver,
JOHN H. MCGARY.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 1, 1893.

President Cleveland, in accordance with the announcement made when he left Washingaon, just after the extra session met, is back at his dest in the White House, and his appearance is the best refutation of the many sensational stories that have been published within the last week about the dangerous condition he was in. He probably never dreamed, when he was having those two troublesome teeth extracted and their ulcerated roots cut out, two months ago, that it would by and by grow into an operation in which the greater portion of his jaw bone would, in the mind of the sensational writer, have to be cut away in order to remove the terrible cancerous growth. In short it was but another version of the familliar old story or the man who vomited three black crows. President Cleveland is not sick, and he has not been sick since he left Washington. In fact, there were few days while he was away that he did not perform some of his public duties, as the records in the office of his private secretary will show.

The passage of the bill for the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman silver law by the House has focussed public attention upon the Sentae, where financial speeches are now the order of the day. How long the senate will talk before voting is a question that will be answered differently by nine out of every ten men in Washington. Two weeks is the shortest time given by any one, and the longest goes away up in the months. An agreement of some sort will have to be reached before a vote can be taken, and the silver Senators declare they will make no agreement, unless the Voorhees bill, which has been reported as a substitute for the Wilson bill that was passed by the House, is amended in a manner satisfactory to them. The democratic leaders, however, are confident that an agreement will shortly be reached.

Procrastination may be the thief of time, as the old school adage says, but it isn't getting a chance to steal much of it from the House Ways and Means committee, which has buckled right down to the tariff question with the determination to report a reform tariff bill at the extra session, or very early in the regular session. While the committee is not disposed to encourage long-drawn-out hearings of every Tom, Dick and Harry who may think themselves tariff experts, it will grant proper hearings to all parties who by reason of their prominence in lines of business that may be affected by a change in the tariff have a reasonable right to be heard. The hearings will begin Monday and end Sept 20.

Speaker Crisp did a very unusual although not unprocedented thing when he called Representative Richardson, of Tennessee, to the Speaker's chair and decended to the floor of the House to reply to the unjust and uncalled-for attack which ex-Speaker Reed made upon the new rules of the House. Mr. Reed was surprised, and before the speaker got throughly disgusted to find himself justly-held up to the scorn of the House and the country for having falsly claimed that the new rules were in the victorious rules with which he gagged the House of the the fifty-first Congress. It is not the first time that Mr. Crisp has proven himself more than a match for the Maine blusterer, and it will not be the last. The differance between the new rules of the House and the notarious Reed rules is precisely that between the Government of the U. S. and the Government of Russia—the new rules put the authority for shutting off debate in the hands of the majoaity of the House, where it alone belongs, and the Reed rules put it into the hands of Reed, making him more of an autocrat than would be tolerated in any legislative body in the world.

It is queer how some things work. It is now said that Col. Chas. P. Lincoln, who was deputy Pension Commissioner under Raum, and who has lately gained some notoriety by publicly announcing his intention to test in the courts the right of the Commissioner of Pensions to suspend pensioners, except in cases where fraud is proven to have been used in securing the pension, got the scheme up for no other purpose than to boom his candidacy for Commander-in-Chief of the G. A. R. at the coming encampment of that organization at Indianapolis.

It is regarded as significant that Speaker Crisp should have attached "If I am in Washington on that date" to his acceptance of an invitation to deliver a short address at the centenial celebration of the laying of the cornerstone of the Capitol, to be held on the 18th of September. It is taken to mean that the Speaker thinks the extra session may adjourn before that date, and consequently that the Senate will be prompt in acting on the Voorhees bill.

PHYSIOLOGISTS say that active exercise of a man's arms and chest promotes the activity of his mind. Perhaps this is why pugilists do so much talking.

THE sultan of Turkey has 300 wives; the king of Dahomey, 250; the shah of Persia, 400; the king of Siam, 600; the king of Ashantee, 3,000, and the emperor of Morocco about 6,000.

DAVID S. PATTERSON, of Nebraska, who has recently patented an improvement in the driving gear of locomotives, is seventy-five years old, and has been totally blind from infancy.

PUTTING a man on ice has always been considered a humorous conceit, but recently a New York man was locked up in a refrigerating room accidentally, where he nearly froze to death.

DON JOSE GALINDO, mayor of Valencia, Spain, has been sentenced to fourteen years each on 217 indictments for falsifying public documents, 3,038 years in all. They might have taken off those odd 38.

"WHETHER it would be better to live with a slovenly, good-natured wife or a tidy, scolding wife," was the question debated in a Washington county (Me.) lyceum and was carried in favor of the slack woman.

DURING all the stoppage of mills and howls of the calamityites the mild and peaceable coal barons announce a meeting at Pittsburgh to advance rates. We intend to use the attic stairs for fuel this winter.

PROF. DENTON thinks express trains will never go very much faster than they do now. He bases this opinion on the fact that the resistance increases more rapidly than the speed, so that at last a limit must be reached.

DR. MARY WALKER injured her right leg some years ago, and at times it causes her great inconvenience. To a friend who met her the other day and asked the fair doctor how her health was, she replied: "My right Walker is a little stiff nowadays, but otherwise I am all right."

AT last the size of hailstones has been reduced to a scientific certainty, and there need be no more lying. Walnuts, hens' eggs and potatoes all vary in size, but now that the baseball has been adopted as the hail standard we know where we are at. A professional baseball has a definite size.

A MAN in New York was arrested for kissing another man's wife. The sentence of the court was that the prisoner should kiss own wife, who was present n the court room. He willingly did so and was discharged. If the judge considered that a penalty, ten to one he has married a chromo himself.

A WOMAN has unraveled the secret of the Aztec calendar and she'll give it away. The discovery is expected to throw much light on the history and customs of the ancient inhabitants of America, and archæologists pronounce it a most important contribution to the lore of that branch of investigation. Woman's curiosity, properly trained and directed, can work wonders.

A CONGREGATIONAL clergyman of Ohio has forwarded to the patent office at Washington a model of a device for furnishing communicants with individual cups. They are about two inches high, one inch at the mouth, tapering down to nearly five-eighths of an inch at the bottom. As many as forty can conveniently be carried in a frame, and be replenished in a few seconds.

SOCIAL reformers have found another good text to enlarge upon. A New York state bride who was kissed by all her friends came down with diphtheria the morning after the wedding, and now several of the friends have been affected with the same disease. Things have come to a pretty pass when we are not to be allowed to indulge even in kissing without a physician's prescription.

THE ministers have been discussing the bad boy problem and casting about for the best method of making the bad boy good and preventing the good boy from becoming bad. The first step should be the education of the parents to a sense of their responsibility. Parents nowadays are inclined to intrust too large a share of the training of their children to the public schools, the church and the state. Character is formed at home.

THE nearest living relative of George Washington is Ebenezer Burgess Ball, who keeps a little cigar stand in the rotunda of the pension office in Washington. The Sons of the American Revolution have investigated his claims thoroughly and their verdict goes to support them. He is said to resemble Washington's portrait much more closely than any other person claiming relationship and pictures that have been taken of him dressed in the continental uniform have been mistaken by many for representations of Washington himself. Mr. Ball is 76 years old, but is hale and hearty.

SENATOR GORMAN is pachydermatous so far as newspaper attacks are concerned. The correspondent of a New York paper who imagined that he had fairly flayed the Marylander alive for his views respecting the silver question called upon him to ask if he had anything to say in reply. "Really," said Mr. Gorman, smiling sweetly, "I very seldom see your paper, and have not heard of the article referred to. Besides, the matter is of no importance, I assure you." And then the correspondent went out and communed with nature for an hour or so, but he didn't feel any better.

MOLLY STARK not only did not die a widow because of the valorous battle of Bennington, but she lived on to become a noble mother in Israel, and at one time thirty out of forty of the children attending the district school in what is called the "Stark district" of New Hampshire were named Stark. They were all descendants of the four children Molly bore to the hero of Bennington. Now, however, the name is almost extinct in New Hampshire, and in Manchester, the center of the Stark district, only two or three persons are left who bear the name of the brave general of the revolution.

CAMP FIRES LIGHTED.

The Grand Army Encampment at Indianapolis Attracts a Great Crowd—Addresses by Gen. Harrison and Commander Weissert.

INDIANAPOLIS Ind., Sept. 6.—The veterans of the union armies have been pouring into Indianapolis for the past twenty-four hours with scarcely a break in the procession. It is estimated that 25,000 uniformed men of the Grand Army of the Republic are in camp. Probably twice as many persons who are not members of the organization have arrived. There is no diminution in the crowds that are pouring through the gates of the union station. It looks like there might be 150,000 or 200,000 strangers in town to witness the great parade. Four-fifths of the posts that poured out of the union station were from Indiana or the close lying counties of Illinois, Ohio and Michigan.

The contest for commander in chief has been the absorbing theme about headquarters. It looks as if John B. Adams, of Massachusetts, known as COMMANDER IN CHIEF WEISSERT.

"Huffy Jack" Adams, would be commander. He has the united support of the east and several states in the west have promised to support him. S. H. Hurst, of Ohio, still feels confident. Charles P. Lincoln, of Michigan, who was deputy commissioner of pensions under Harrison, has a considerable following. There was some surprise when E. Burd Grubb, of New Jersey, announced that he was a candidate for commander.

It has been practically decided in advance of the session of the encampment that the next gathering will be held at Pittsburgh. Members of the association were delighted when a delegation of Pittsburgers arrived and announced that the city had pledged $100,000 for the entertainment of the veterans next year. It was the first bid that had been made and was eagerly accepted. The Kansas delegation has announced that it will vote to take the encampment east again for the reason that the railroads of the west have not shown a disposition to treat the old soldiers right.

The naval veterans held their business meeting Monday, and to-day will act as an escort for the G. A. R. in the grand parade. Admiral B. S. Osborn was re-elected commander of the association, Byrnes Sears, of Baltimore, was elected commodore, and Capt. R. N. Hopkins, of Chicago, captain. The association voted to go to Pittsburgh next year.

The encampment was formally welcomed to Indianapolis Monday night by a meeting in Tomlinson's hall. The principal address of welcome was delivered by ex-President Harrison. The ex-president dwelt upon the subject of pensions. He denounced in strong language a pension policy that reflects upon the integrity of the veterans of the war. His remarks on the subject of pensions brought forth cheers from the veterans.

Commander in Chief Weissert, in response to the address, also referred to the pension question. He indorsed what ex-President Harrison had said and indicated that the Grand Army of the Republic, through the eventful meeting, would speak its feelings in reference to the treatment of pensioners by the democratic administration.

Besides speaking at Tomlinson's hall, ex-President Harrison addressed the veterans in Camp Wilder in the afternoon and the camp fire of the Army of the Cumberland at night. He is the central figure of the encampment.

The thing which will no doubt occupy the greater part of the time of the encampment is the subject of pensions. A claim will be made that a pension claim once allowed and entered on the rolls is a judgment against the government, and that the government has no right to deprive the pensioner of his money without a formal opening of the case. It is said 6,000 pensioners have been suspended or cut off or had their last increase recalled. Commander in Chief Weissert's annual address will be delivered Wednesday. He will discuss the pension question and other subjects of interest to the members.

TWO MEN SLAIN.

Brutal Double Murder in a Lonely Spot Near Calumet, Mich.

HOUGHTON, Mich., Sept. 6.—John Salo and Iwar Pairola, who came from Minnesota a week ago, were murdered Sunday night at Joseph Simmons' temperance saloon on the road from Hancock to Calumet, about 4 miles west of the latter place. The jugular vein and carotid artery were severed in both men by stabs from a knife. Nat Hergoner was also dangerously stabbed, but will recover. Simmons kept an unlicensed saloon and a disreputable place. There is no clew.

Drained of Currency.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Sept. 6.—The subtreasury is drained of its currency for the first time in its history. Paper money is not much used in San Francisco and the paper money recently called for had lain in the treasury vault ten years. Currency now commands a premium of 3 per cent. The premium on gold is 2½ per cent. and that on silver 2 per cent. There has been no extraordinary call on the subtreasury for fractional silver, and $25,000,000 of that is now in the vaults. Over $1,000,000 in currency was taken out and most of it went to New York.

TOILERS TRAMP.

Monster Parades at Various Points Mark the Celebration of Labor Day.

CHICAGO, Sept. 6.—Fifteen thousand labor veterans skilled in handicraft formed the grand army of toil which marched the streets of Chicago Monday. Banners waved, bands played stirring airs and great crowds of sympathizers thronged the sidewalks. It was a model exhibition of organized labor's peaceful forces. Rigid discipline prevailed and the proceedings went forward evenly and quietly.

After the parade the crowds of toilers divided, a portion of them going to Kuhn's park where an enjoyable picnic was held. The rest went to Ogden's grove where the day and evening were spent in listening to addresses, in dancing and witnessing displays of fireworks at night. At Kuhn's park Gov. Altgeld delivered the principal address. Mayor Harrison and Samuel Gompers, president of the Federation of Labor, and Gov. Altgeld spoke at Ogden's grove.

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—Perfect weather characterized Labor day in New York. At 11 o'clock the big manufactories were shut down. All wholesale establishments, business exchanges, down-town offices and most of the retail shops were closed. Up-town the holiday was not so generally observed. The state and surrogate courts were not opened. The United States courts and court of general sessions were opened for a few minutes only. The labor parade moved from Cooper Union to the Battery. The labor leaders calculated that 15,000 men were in line. The colors carried were the stars and stripes and flags of the different unions, together with a large portrait of Washington by the Journeymen Plasterers union. The men in line were joined at the Battery by their wives and children and went to Staten Island to enjoy themselves.

The wage-workers of Brooklyn turned out 14,000 strong to take part in the two principal labor processions. Besides these probably a dozen trade unions paraded in numbers proportionate to their importance. The demonstration of the central labor union was the big one—9,000 men were said to be in line.

Dispatches from the various cities and towns throughout the state and New Jersey indicate that the day was given over to recreation and out-of-door sports by all classes.

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 6.—There were little more than 2,000 men in the Labor day parade here, which is considerably smaller than the usual turnout. Many of the union men who are out of work refused to march for the reason that they were not employed, while many others refused to lay off for a day owing to a desire to get in as much work as possible before snow flies. As it was, however, a large proportion of the men who marched are out of work. The effects of the business depression were noticeable by the absence of a large number of industrial floats usually furnished by business firms.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 6.—The various workingmen's unions paraded the streets in three great divisions, and in the afternoon several thousand of them went to Wildwood for a picnic. During the afternoon an address was delivered by W. W. Erwin, the attorney who acquired a national reputation by securing the acquittal of the Homestead rioters.

DAVENPORT, Ia., Sept. 6.—Labor day, a legal holiday in Iowa, was celebrated by the cities of Davenport, Rock Island and Moline and surrounding towns. Business was suspended and the public schools closed. Public buildings and many private houses were decorated. The line of march for the parade was nearly 3 miles in length. About 2,000 men were in line, divided into their distinctive unions and societies. In the afternoon at Schultzer park addresses were made by the mayors of Davenport and Rock Island. The principal speech of the day was made by Gen. James B. Weaver, populist candidate for president last fall. The burden of his effort was that the country needs a greater volume of money.

The day was appropriately observed at Dubuque, Ottumwa and other points in this state.

Dispatches indicate an appropriate observance of Labor day in the following places:

Illinois—Streator, Lincoln, Quincy, Champaign, Elgin, Jacksonville, Galesburg, Rockford, Danville, Springfield, Peoria, Ottawa and Bloomington.

Indiana—Terre Haute and Logansport.

Michigan—Detroit and Battle Creek.

Also at Boston, Mass., Cincinnati, O., Baltimore, Md., Louisville, Ky., Chattanooga, Tenn., Topeka, Kan., Kansas City, Mo., Cleveland, O., Denver, Col., and Omaha, Neb.

THREE CHILDREN PERISH.

They Are Drowned in a Mill Pond Near Wautoma, Wis.

WAUTOMA, Wis., Sept. 6.—George Lorey's family started for church 4 miles west of here Sunday and when passing a mill pond an attempt was made to back the wagon in to soak the wheels. The bed of the pond sloped abruptly a short distance from shore, and the team backed quickly into 16 or 18 feet of water. Mr. Lorey sprang out of the water and saved his wife and one child, but two of his daughters, aged 11 and 13, and Johnnie Nelson, aged 13 years, were drowned before they could be rescued. The team was also drowned.

HIS CAREER ENDS.

Death Near Beverly, Mass., of Col. Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte.

BEVERLY, Mass., Sept. 6.—Col. Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte died at his summer home here, Prides' crossing, at 9:30 o'clock Sunday night.

[Col. Bonaparte was the oldest grandson of Jerome Bonaparte, king of Westphalia, and a grand nephew of Napoleon Bonaparte. Although born in America, and for most of his life a resident of Baltimore, he enjoyed at one time the distinction of being the hope of the Bonapartist party in France, and upon the downfall of Napoleon III. was pushed forward for the regency. His followers at that time hoped he would succeed to the throne of France.]

Sugar Beet Crop of Europe.

BRUSSELS, Sept. 6.—The agricultural department in its review of the sugar beet crop of Europe estimates the deficiency in France, Belgium and the Netherlands as 50,000 tons of raw sugar, and the surplus in Germany, Austria-Hungary and Russia at 600,000 tons.

Couldn't Sell Their Gold.

HELENA, Mont., Sept. 6.—A singular result of the scarcity of money is the fact that gold miners are unable to sell their product for cash when brought into this city. The banks do not care to reduce their supply of available cash for this purpose.

APPALLING.

The Recent Disaster Along the Southern Coast the Worst Ever Known — The Death List Daily Swelling—The Latest Accounting Shows Over 700 Victims—Some Think the Total Will Reach 15,000—Great Suffering Among Survivers.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Sept. 5.—It is fast developing that the loss of life and destruction of all kinds of property on the sea islands that skirt the southeastern coast of South Carolina by the recent hurricane have never been paralleled in this country.

Estimates of the dead here range all the way from 400 to 1,500, but in no instance has anyone said that less than 400 lives have been lost. The averages have been between 600 and 800, and from all that can be learned that seems to be about the correct estimate.

Coroner Wills has made this list of the number drowned on the several islands:

Warsaw, 47; Coffin point, 80; Dawthad, 37; Coosaw island, 25; Pacific works (Chisholm's island), 26; Hunting island, about 25; St. Helena island, 200; Savannah river plantations, 150; Beaufort, 2; Salt water bridge, 4; Otaheta plantation, 6; on tug boats, 6; Grays hill, 3; Perrey Clear's point, 11; Ladies' island, 27; Land's end, 23; Kane's neck, 60; Coosaw mines, 5; Paris island, 24. Total, 758.

It is estimated that 15,000 are in a starving condition. The crops are partially destroyed, the stock is all drowned, and there is actually not enough provisions in the country to keep the people alive.

From Morris island all the way down to the Tybee all are akin in their distress. Morris island, John's island, Edisto, Wardmalaw, James island, Charleston's neighbors, have perhaps fared somewhat better than St. Helena, Coosaw, Dathan, Port Royal, Paris, Dawfuskie, Ladies and the myriad of smaller islands tributuary to Beaufort. Huddled together and within almost a stone's throw of each other are Port Royal, the largest of them all, and Ladies, Dathan, Morgan, Coosaw, Chisholm, St. Helena and Eddings island. It is almost one isle, cut up with navigable lagoons. Skirting the ocean front, looking out to the broad Atlantic, are Hilton Head island, Dawfuskie island and further over to Charleston, Chaplin's island, Prentis island and Reynold's island. Hundreds of smaller islands dot the coast. To-day most of them are in ruins and the majority of the inhabitants are searching in vain for sustenance. From ten to fifteen thousands do marketing in Beaufort. What they will now do is the question. Higher up the coast there are whites on the islands who have something left. Down here nothing is left. Eighty per cent. of the houses has been swept away by the terrific storm. At Ladies' island 700 houses are gone; Eastice place of fifty houses, three are left. Hope plantation, all homes destroyed. That is the register at Indian Hill, out of seventy-five places on Coosaw island but a dozen are left, and so it goes.

The population on these islands is almost entirely colored, with a few whites who keep stores or manage extensive farms. The crops consist almost entirely of sea island cotton, with a few patches of corn, potatoes and small grain. Nothing is left of the crop except on the highlands.

There is danger of a water famine all over the islands. Even in Beaufort county all the wells and cisterns are filled with hot water. The people were killed by the houses falling on them and by drowning. The cabins were scattered everywhere. In some places as many as sixteen bodies could be found huddled together on the roads. They have not begun to find even a small proportion of the bodies. Some of them have been swept far up in the marshes, where man cannot go. At Cains neck there are deer, cows, hogs, snakes and all kinds of wild animals piled up together, making the section so offensive that no one can go there. Many persons are dying from starvation.

CHINESE TROUBLES.

Masked Mob at Selma Loot Several Washhouses and Steal $3,000.

SELMA, Cal., Sept. 5.—A mob of twenty masked men Friday night made a raid on the Chinese washhouses in the suburbs. They came from the vineyards near town and were headed by a drunken hoodlum named Vincent. All the houses in Chinatown were broken into, money tills and trunks of the Chinese were forced open and rifled and clothing, cigars and other goods stolen. The mob marched through the town, taking seven Chinese with them toward Fresno, when Constable Spencer ordered them to stop. No heed being paid to his order, he opened fire with a Winchester. Six shots were fired, one of them grazing Vincent's forehead and another going through the hat of one of the gang. The rioters broke and ran, part of them going on toward Fresno with the Chinese. The officers secured help and teams and overtook the escaping party near Fowler. There are now eleven men under arrest and warrants are out for several others. The Chinese claim to have lost about $3,000 in coin, besides other property.

Floods Do Great Damage in Bahar.

CALCUTTA, Sept. 5.—Floods are causing great damage in the province of Bahar, in Bengal. Hundreds of square miles, including the towns of Mosarphu, Darbhanga and Paddy, are submerged. The rice crops are ruined and thousands of persons are homeless. Other parts of eastern Bengal are also suffering from floods. A famine is feared.

Firebugs Confess.

HARRISBURG, Pa., Sept. 5.—Joe Mumma and John Fink, of Mechanicsburg, a small town about 9 miles from this city, have just confessed to burning eight barns and other buildings, entailing a loss of $30,000. These buildings were all destroyed within a year. Fink planned the manner of destroying the buildings and Mumma applied the match. The first buildings were fired to boom the town. The borough then offered a reward of $500 for the arrest. Fink, thinking he could obtain the same, turned state's evidence and betrayed Mumma. Both men are now in jail.

Thirteen Lives Lost.

MOSCOW, Sept. 5.—A terrible disaster has happened the steamer Orloff, plying between Hijui Novorgod and Astrakhan. The steamer was completely destroyed by fire and thirteen lives are reported lost.

APPLIED SCIENCE.

An Electrician Who Made Good Use of His Knowledge.

A Brooklyn electrician has been annoyed by cat concerts in his back yard. Every night the cat ranged themselves on the back fence and meowed in chorus. The leading tenor in the company was a monster with a falsetto voice of great range and power. He was particularly strong in roulade and cadenza, and some of his fortomento passages were models in expression.

But the concerts became monotonous after awhile, and the electrician determined to stop them. He placed a thin steel plate on top of the fence and connected it with a motor in the kitchen. He permitted the plate to remain on the fence for three nights, until the big tenor had become accustomed to sitting on it. The plate was a great improvement as a seat over the ragged edge of the fence. On one moonlight night the maltese soprano assoluta, the cherry-colored mezzo and the bewhiskered tenor robusto were singing a Chicago arrangement of "Maria, Where Art Thou?"

The tenor had reached a sustained passage surcharged with love, and had risen on his hind legs to give freer expression to it, when the current was turned on. The sustained passage was cut in two as if with a cleaver. It ended in a most discordant squawk as the tenor fell off the fence upon his back, only to bound in the air like a ball and disappear over the fence and down the street like a black comet.—N. Y. Advertiser.

A WELL-FIXED COUNTRYMAN.

Probability That He Will Soon Embark in Urban Speculation.

On a western road sat two admirable specimens of the genus "hayseed." They were garrulous old chaps, and talked and chewed tobacco as a school girl chews gum.

"I reckon we'll lose Ben Gross afore long," said one, branching off on a fresh topic.

"Eh?"

"Yaas—'t won't s'prise me a bit ef Ben goes to New York an' speckelates."

"No! You don't say Ben's a gittin' 's rich 's that?"

"Wall, I guess he's 'bout the best-fixed man in our place now since W. F. Simpkins died."

"Ye don't say! How much d'ye s'pose Ben's woth now, biled down?"

"Wall, ye kain't jest tell. I know o' my own sartin knowledge he has over $40 in the bank, an' his crop o' taters ain't dug yit. They'll bring him in right smart o' cash."

"Gee whiz!"

"Yass, an' John Summers owes him $3.75 on that old game of poker yit. He's slow, but he's good for it, I guess."

The other was silent for some time, evidently ruminating upon such vast wealth. Then he suddenly inquired:

"W'at's he goin' to monkey with in New York?"

"I dunno. Wall street, like as not."—N. Y. Herald.

The World's Inn.

The above Chicago hotel, under the capable management of Mr. Chas. E. Leland, is having the patronage it deserves. It is not a fire-trap, but is built of steel and fire-proof tile, combining absolute safety with reasonable prices. Its location—southwest corner Midway Plaisance (60th st.) and Madison ave.—is unsurpassed, as it faces the Fair Grounds. Is accessible by steam, cable and elevated lines. Write or telegraph in advance of your coming for accommodations, or look The World's Inn up when you arrive. You will not be disappointed.

DUTY.

The camp-fire dimly burns
Through the night and the snow,
And over a frozen earth
The wild winds blow.

But the sentinel stands at his post
As the hours creep by,
While clouds grow heavy and thick
In the sullen sky.

His limbs drag hard, he longs
To rest awhile:
Yet over his white, cold lips
Comes never a smile.

For his heart is a soldier's heart,
And his blood runs warm
When he thinks of his brother-men
Asleep in the storm.

Then he shoulders his gun and draws
A quick, deep breath:
What foeman shall conquer him now
But the foeman Death!

A BOY'S ROOM.

His Experience at Taking Care of It Himself.

"Where is my vest? Oh, here 'tis—just where I shied it last night."

Fred picked up his vest from behind the bed, and then looked around for his collar.

"I wonder, now, if that collar's been carried off to the wash! Just like Susan! If ever I get hold of one that fits me better than any other, and would like to hold on to it for a little while, off it goes. Oh, here 'tis. I forgot I was standing by the window when I took it off, and left it on the sill. But it's all limp. Dear me, what a drawer! I wonder who interferes with my things? I'm sure I never got it into such a muddle as this."

Stirring among collars and neckties, turning things up and down in a way that would lead anyone reasonably to give him credit for any amount of disorder, Fred at length found a collar.

"Now, my necktie. Where did I put the one I wore in the morning, when I dressed in the afternoon? Of course, some one was in here straightening up my room. I never know where to find anything after that. Come in."

Fred turned a face full of abused expression toward the door as his mother's entrance followed her tap upon it.

"Good morning. Are you ready for breakfast, dear? Here is one of your neckties."

"Yes, the very one I was looking for. Who took it away?"

"Susan carried away for the wash the clothes you took off when you dressed, and this was among them. You must have thrown it down."

"Yes, I knew somebody must have been here."

"My dear boy," mother looked around with a discouraged face, "how often must I speak to you about keeping your things in better order? You really get worse and worse. I come in here and set the room to rights, and by the next day it will be as untidy as before."

"O mother, 'tidy' may do very well for girls or women. It's a real girls' word, I think."

"Good for either boys or girls. I am sorry to see such an ugly habit growing with you."

"Really, mother," said Fred, with a return of the injured look, "one would think from your talk that you thought it a real sin—that you look upon it as you might look upon lying or stealing and such."

"No. But in evil habit is evil, make the best you can of it. Its indulgence is sure to have an evil effect upon the character. A person slouchy and slovenly in his small habits is pretty likely to be so in the greater thing in his life. I wonder you don't find enough inconvenience from your carelessness to lead you to wish to improve."

"My carelessness, mother? Why, if my things could only be left alone, I'd get along well enough. When I come into the room, I never know where to find anything, because some one has been setting things in order. Of course I don't mean, mother dear, that all you do is not the very best that could be done; but a boy, you know," Fred put on a dignified air, "can't be expected to be just like a girl, and ought, I think, to be allowed to follow out his own way a little in his own room."

"How do you think it would work if you were left to your own way?" said his mother with a smile.

"Entirely? Why, mother, I think it would be fine."

"I have a great mind to let you try it," she said.

"Do, mother!" said Fred, eagerly. "I never could see the use—with all respect for you, you understand—of this everlasting sweeping and dusting. I'll agree to take entire charge of the room if I may be left to myself."

"Well," said mother, still with the smile, "I think Susan would better make your bed."

"No," interposed Fred. "Sometimes I have things lying there that I don't want touched."

"Then she need only attend to the washstand. You may bring me anything which needs mending, for I'm afraid that it might make the keeping of our agreement difficult for me if I made visits to the room."

"I will. I want to do the sweeping myself—that is, if it needs any sweeping—for Susan always plays the mischief with my specimens."

"You may try it." And mother went down to breakfast, still smiling.

For a few days Fred rejoiced in his new-found freedom, as he called it—freedom to fling his things this way and that, in full assurance that he would have the delight of finding them exactly where he had flung them.

"But I must say it gets a little monotonous," he admitted to himself, with a little shake of his head, "to find all my coats and vests and trousers piled together on the same chair, and to hunt among dirty collars for clean ones. Who could have dreamed that mother settled up for me so often? But it is a privilege to have a chance to keep my specimens just as I want to keep them."

But even a privilege may be overdone, Fred was obliged to acknowledge one morning not long after. He had brought a friend in to see his geological specimens and his collection of butterflies.

As usual, he had set things out of his hands just where it was most convenient to set them. Arriving at home rather late in the evening, he had come in hastily and gone to bed in the dark, having forgotten to bring up any matches.

"Well," he exclaimed, sitting up in bed to take rather a disconsolate view of his surroundings, "if I chose to confess it, I wouldn't mind having mother—and Susan too—to skirmish about here for awhile. How did I come to set those trays and boxes on the foot of the bed! I've had the meanest kind of a night, those stones going rattle-te-bang on the floor every time I turned over! And—oh, my! Look at my butterflies!"

In real regret he gathered up the crushed remains of the pretty winged creatures he had taken such pains and such pleasure in mounting. While doing so his attention was for the first time drawn to the condition of the carpet.

"Well, it really is dirty. And no one can say I ever liked dirt. Why, it looks as though some one had been throwing a lot of wool and feathers under my bed. I'll give it a sweep to-day. I undertook to do my own sweeping. I suppose folks think boys can't sweep."

Fred put all his strength into the wielding of the broom. It had been a rainy week, and Susan's careful hands had not supplemented her morning care of the room by gathering with brush and dust-pan of the mud which his careless feet brought in. It was now dried and ground into the carpet, to be raised in clouds of dust by his vigorous sweeping.

"Phew!" Glad enough was he, having at length finished, to get into the open air, burdened with a few doubts as to whether, after all, he so very much enjoyed the new order of things.

"I don't really believe boys were made to be housemaids," he concluded. "But it's only an experiment. There won't be any trouble in getting back to mother's dear, careful ways," conscious of an unexpressed yet decidedly increasing respect for his mother's ways.

Late in the day Fred rushed back to his room to make ready for an evening to be spent in company which he held in high esteem. Fred's slovenliness did not, as a general thing, extend to the care of his person, his mother having often had occasion to wonder at the neat appearance with which he contrived to emerge from the chaos of his room.

"Thunder!" Fred stood for a moment at his room door, finding the situation worthy of his strongest expletive.

The dust from which he had fled lay thickly upon everything, adding dismally to the prevailing disorder.

"I forgot all about the things mother spreads over things when she sweeps. How I hate dust on books! Well," seizing a towel and hastily whisking it about, "I haven't time to do much dusting now. Jack Harper will call for me in a quarter of an hour.

"Buttons off? I forgot to take my best suit to mother. And there's a little rip near the coat cuff, but I can ink that."

Setting the ink on the bureau, he carefully darkened the white streak, but as he turned from a study of the effect, his brow took on a deeper cloud.

"My white tie in the blacking box!" He snatched it up. "The last one I have left! And all these," tumbling over a number which were mixed in with other things thrown on the table, "are covered with dust. Perhaps this one will do; but there's a spot on it."

Seizing a towel, he carefully rubbed the front of the lightest-colored tie he could find. But it was the towel which had already done duty as a duster, and was streaked with the sooty dust which prevails in a house in which bituminous coal is used.

As the tie soon looked rather worse than better, Fred threw both towel and tie from him with an angry exclamation. They struck something on the bureau, which went with them to the floor.

"Oh, that ink! And all over those books I left there! What shall I—Mother! mother!"

Mother, quickly appearing in answer to his loud cry of distress, could not forbear a smile at the mixture of expressions on Fred's face. Despair, mortification and a comical sense of the ludicrous seemed striving for the mastery.

"O mother," he said, after she had done her best to arrest any further mischief from the ink, "will you take me back?"

"Take you back?" she asked, not quite understanding what he meant.

"Yes, me and my room. I've given up. I'll take all you have to say on the subject of boys and tidiness if only you'll wind me up and then keep me running. But first will you please go down and tell Jack Harper I can't go to-night?"

"Why can't you, dear? I thought you were so anxious to go."

"So I was; but look at me. Buttons off. Rips. I can't find a clean collar in that muddle, and my white tie's spoiled."

"I'll ask Jack to wait for you a few minutes. I think we can manage things yet."

Most boys who have mothers can imagine the quickness with which her hands flew from one thing to another in making that particular boy look as a boy should look. From hidden depths of her own stores a tie was unearthed. Buttons went on and rips hid themselves from sight. At the end of a quarter of an hour Fred joined his friends a wiser and happier boy.

Some hours later he turned the light high for a satisfied gaze about his room.

"This is jolly! Everything clean, everything in place. Well, it's rather mean in me if I can't cooperate with mother and Susan in keeping myself straight. I guess its best for folks in this world to help each other run each other, and not be always making things harder for each other—I mean me, for mother and Susan—and other folks for each other."

With which very indefinitely expressed but very sincerely felt sentiment as to every day's small duty, Fred went to bed.—Sydney Dayre, in Interior.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—A Sanskirt school for Hindoo girls has been opened in Calcutta.

—It is now just 100 years since Protestant missionary work was begun in India.

—A new theological seminary has been established by the synod of Kentucky of the Presbyterian church south at Louisville, Ky.

—There are 485 missionaries on the staff of the London city mission. French, Germans, Spaniards and other foreigners are employed to reach certain classes.

—Prof. William S. Tyler, for fifty years the loved and honored professor of Greek at Amherst college, Massachusetts, often called "the Amherst Socrates," is to retire from his position and devote himself to the preparation of a book.

—Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper, who arganized the first kindergarten in San Francisco in 1880, has received more than $300,000 to enable her to carry on the work. There are now sixty-five kindergartens in the city, and more than 10,000 children have been trained in them.

—Many Stundists now in banishment in Transcaucasia will petition the czar to change their place of exile to Siberia, were agricultural land is plentiful and where they may have some chance of making a living. Now they are entirely dependent upon the charity of their friends.

—Seventy young men have gone from the Evangelists' home, Birmingham, to preach in England and abroad. Their work is on nonsectarian lines, and their labors have been wonderfully successful. Mr. Adell is about to build a large hall in the thickly populated part of Birmingham, to gather in the neglected masses.

—Fifty years ago there were twenty-four professors in the university of Cambridge, of whom five only were laymen. There are now forty professors, of whom, excluding the professors of divinity, only three are in holy orders; while at Oxford, of the forty-eight professors, excluding the professors of divinity, again only three are clergymen.—Nineteenth Century.

—Rev. M. M. Vancleave, pastor of the Baptist church at Crawfordsville, Ind., has the enviable ministerial record of having married seven hundred and sixty couples. This venerable clergyman has preached the Gospel for nearly eighty years, and the good, old-fashioned ceremony with which he ties the nuptial knot neatly and with dispatch makes the ordeal a pleasure even to the most bashful swain.

—It was decided by the Hermannsburgh missionaries among the Zulus, after holding a conference, to abolish the prevailing custom among the natives of exchanging girls and women for cattle. Strange to say, the Christian converts refuse to submit to this innovation, and have demanded of the missionaries that they prove to them from the Scriptures that it would be unlawful for them to sell their daughters for cattle.

—Nagasaka, the educated Jap who fell in love with the Salvation army at Adelphi theater, San Francisco, is now on his way to London to lay the claims of Japan before Gen. Booth. Since his conversion Nagasaka has been busy translating the army literature into his own language, and some two hundred army songs, besides the general's holiness readings, pamphlets, explanatory of the Salvation army, are now to be found in the hieroglyphics of Nagasaka's vernacular.

TERROR AND TENDERFOOT.

A Story of Cold Nerve Developed Under Stress of Circumstances.

"As a general thing," said an old forty-niner, "the tenderfoot wasn't in it with the bad man of the mining camp, and it wasn't natural to expect that he should be, but occasionally there did appear one who could more than hold his own. I recall a man named Caleb Finby, who came to Dream gulch in its earlier days when that region was full of bad men. He was a tall, spare young man with a head full of brains and he was quick and businesslike in everything that he did, but still he was not a man that the generality of men would have picked out as the possessor of nerve.

"Mr. Finby set out one day to go to the neighboring camp of Devil's Claw canyon. As he was proceeding along the road he suddenly came upon, or, rather, there came suddenly upon him, a man who asked him to throw up his hands. It was Big Bill Belter, the terror of Devil's Claw canyon.

"'I throw 'em up,' said Mr. Finby, cheerfully, as he raised them, 'because you ask me to, and I don't want to seem impolite. But at the same time I must inform you that you are taking an entirely unnecessary precaution; my gun isn't loaded.'

"Mr. Belter was himself a man of fine gall, and his recognition of that quality in another awakened in him a certain degree of admiration. Quick to perceive the chance in Mr. Belter's manner, faint and undefined as it was, Mr. Finby went on:

"'But I realize now as I have done before, the carelessness of going about in this way practically unarmed, and if you'll permit me I'll load now as a guard against future contingencies.'

"Mr. Finby's hands came down as he uttered the concluding words, for he had seen the hand that had held the pistol leveled against him fall slowly as the terror listened with a sort of astonished amusement.

"Mr. Finby had in his hip pocket a pistol and in his waistcoat pocket a box of cartridges, which he had bought in deference to the advice of friends, but which he had never brought together into useful conjunction, partly because he was not personally bloodthirsty, and partly because of overconfidence in the human race. But he proceeded now to load with perfect calmness, but in his heart amazed at the utter lack of precaution now displayed by Mr. Belter, who stood leaning against a tree and laughing, apparently quite overcome by the broad humor of the situation. Suddenly it was discovered that Mr. Finby's gun was being held in such a position that Mr. Belter could, without inconvenience, look square into the muzzle of it, and Mr. Belter discovered also at the same moment in Mr. Finby's eye a light whose meaning no sane man could by any possibility misunderstand. Mr. Belter was a man with a vast appreciation of the humorous, but not even his sense of humor could discover the faintest gleam of fun in the situation as at present developed, and he suffered the tenderfoot to proceed without further molestation."—N. HINTS TO LETTER WRITERS.

Sensible Suggestions for All Who Correspond.

Do write with black ink. It is always fashionable and in good taste. Colored inks are not refined, and the best writers do not use them.

Do use unruled paper. Everyone should be able to write without lines, which are commonplace and not in fashion.

Do send a neat note, free from blots and blurs. The impression made by the note upon the reader depends almost if not quite as much upon the appearance as upon the contents.

Do spell correctly. A note full of mis-spelled words is inexcusable.

Do write in a legible, plain hand. A fair, round hand is always agreeable, and wins the favor of the reader of the note or manuscript.

Do answer invitations in the third person, if they were so written. Make your response brief, pointed, courteous, and intelligent. It is very amusing to read the long letters which are often sent in reply to a formal invitation.

Do use the same person throughout. If you begin to write in the third person keep that form, and not finish by saying: "I am sorry, but I have another engagement."

Do take time in writing your notes. Make complete and graceful sentences and edeavor to write as "pretty" a note as possible. Know what you desire to say, and then say it in a pointed but complete way, avoiding wordiness.

Do be honest in letter writing. Exaggerations and careless words are bad enough when spoken, but are inexcusable when written.

Do give to all people their proper titles. Nearly all titles may be abbreviated.

Don't use note paper of deep tints. If colored paper is used at all the pale tints are considered in much better taste, cream being the favorite.

Don't adopt "fads" or affectations in handwriting. A natural, plain writing, free from flourishes, is always desirable and in style.

Don't head a polite note with the date, which should follow the signature.

Don't use abbreviations when writing to a friend, as "I wd be glad to go if I cd." Always write: "I would be glad to go if I could."

Don't use numerals, as 6, 8, 10, but always write out the words six, eight, ten.

Don't write the family history on a postal card. A person who receives anything but a general announcement on a postal card has a right to feel deeply injured.

Don't write a love letter to a person you have seen but once. A good note writer understands how to construct a graceful business note, the note of friendship and the note of formality. There is a form for each.

Don't begin a letter to a comparative stranger with "My dear" or "My friend." After the name address the note with the old and good form of "Dear sir" or "Dear madam."

Don't sign a note with "yours truly," "sincerely," or even "respectfully," unless you mean it. The fondest friend could ask for no stronger expression of affection than "yours truly" or "faithfully yours." The expression "hastily yours" should also be avoided. If you are to write at all take time for it and sign courteously.—Chicago Times.

Water and Milk.

Two cultured Detroit girls were at a country house for a month, kept by an honest old farmer, and just after supper they sat down to talk over their pleasant surroundings.

"Just think," said one, "what lovely milk that was. Nice and rich, and so much better than that blue stuff we get in town."

"It's too good to last, I'm afraid," responded the older one.

Next morning they were up early, walking through the garden before breakfast.

The farmer and his hired man were in the cow-lot adjoining.

"Bill," they heard him call out, "did you water them cows before you milked 'em?"

The girls looked at each other with quick understanding.

"There," exclaimed the elder, "didn't I tell you it was too good to last," and they went slowly and sadly into the house expecting to find blue milk for breakfast.—Detroit Free Press.

He Found Out.

In administering punishment in the navy different penalties carry with them reduction to a lower conduct class. Of these there are four, the fourth being the lowest, and one placed in it is deprived of shore leave for a period of three months. For some breach the executive officer of the United States ship Juniata found it necessary to place a man on the fourth class who decided to try to obtain a mitigation of his sentence. With this object in view he sought and obtained an interview with the executive officer, when the following conversation ensued: "Well, L—, you wanted to see me?" "Yes, sir, I did. I wanted to know, Mr. B—, why you put me on the fourth class?" "Ah, you want to know why I put you on the fourth class, eh? Well, I'll tell you, L—. I put you on the fourth class because I hadn't a fifth class to put you on. Now go forward." He went.—Chicago News.

The Vanishing of Spirits.

When one comes to think of it, it is just as strange that a ghost should disappear as that it should appear. How is it managed? Out of three ghosts which I have viewed, none disappeared, all went past or round the corner, and I did not know they were ghosts till later circumstances made that theory highly probable, if not precisely capable of exact demonstration. One of them certainly was not anybody, could not have been, but was in a dress different from the dress actually worn at the moment by the living person of whom it was the phantom. If we may sleep suddenly for a minute we may dream in that minute; but how is one to know one was asleep? Some cases of contradictory evidence may have arisen from these queer psychological conditions. A seer may be in for perjury with the best desire to tell the truth.—Andrew Lang, in Longman's Magazine.

In his younger years he practiced law in the courts of Lexington and Versailles, and the reputation for wit he made then still lives in the blue-grass region.

—Logan Carlisle, chief clerk of the United States treasury department, is thirty-two years of age. He is directly responsible for the expenditure of over $2,000,000 annually. He is the son of the secretary of the treasury and was selected because his father wanted a person upon whom he could implicitly rely. Young Carlisle is equal to the trust.

—There recently died at Otsego Lake, N. Y., in the ninety-second year of his age, a man named Joseph Francis, who was little known, and yet who had done more for the life-saving service than almost any other, as he was the first man to use iron for building lifeboats and life cars. His appliances were in general use in Europe long before they were adopted by the United States.

—A famous subject of the sultan of Turkey died a short time ago in Adrianople. He was Hadshi Achmed Izzet Pasha, governor-general of the Black Sea province, and a great protege of his sovereign. It was his custom when obliged to give his hand to a Christian so wash it upon withdrawal in the presence of the guest. Further than this, if any part of his clothing happened to touch the "white-faced foreigner" the offending garment was never worn again.

—When the marquis of Salisbury then Lord Robert Cecil, was a young man he went to Australia to seek his fortune. This was in 1852. He worked in the Mount Alexander and Bendigo gold fields, roughing it like the average prospector, doing his own cooking and washing and generally accommodating himself to the customs of the country. He found little gold but accumulated a stock of rugged health that stood him in good stead during the exhausting political campaigns of his later years.

—Bayard Taylor's home of Cedarcroft, just sold, lies in one of the loveliest agricultural regions of the Atlantic coast. It was here that Sidney Lanier wrote some of his best poems. Mr. Taylor himself had become so much a man of the world that he was somewhat at outs with the somewhat narrow Quaker community in which his home was, but he had strong local attachments, and it was a pleasant thing to see him striding about the pretty village of Kennett Square, his iron-gray beard and ruddy face known to all whom he met.

—Mr. Anthony J. Drexel, the Philadelphia philanthropist and the founder of the Drexel institute in that city who died suddenly of apoplexy at Carlsbad, Germany, last June, was born in Philadelphia in 1826. The house of Drexel & Co. was established by his father in 1837 and Anthony entered the bank at the age of thirteen. On the death of F. M. Drexel in 1863, his sons, A. J. and Francis A., succeeded him, and the firm became one of the most substantial in the country. The New York house was founded in 1850, and the Paris branch in 1867.

—"Ma," said a newspaper man's son, "I know why editors call themselves 'we.'" "Why?" "So's the man who doesn't like the article will think there are too many people for him to tackle."—Washington Star.

—Too Powerful.—"When are you going to give us the rest of that article on the 'Power of the Press?'" inquired the foreman. "I dunno," said the editor. "I just got a finger mashed in that cussed jobber."—Truth.

—That Drove Her Off.—"Why did you leave your last place?" said Mrs. Cumso to a girl who wanted a position in the kitchen. "Because the missus went an' took lessons at a cookin' school, mum."—Puck.

—"Why, Tompkins, what are you thinking about? Wearing a silk hat in July?" "Can't help it, old man. Went yachting yesterday, and my straw, true to the old proverb, showed which way the wind blew."—Harper's Bazar.

"No. But we had a little controversy about something, and he bet me a box of candy against a box of cigars. And do you know the dear fellow seemed dreadfully worried for fear I would lose."—Washington Star.

Don't Blame the Cook

If a baking powder is not uniform in strength, so that the same quantity will always do the same work, no one can know how to use it, and uniformly good, light food cannot be produced with it.

All baking powders except Royal, because improperly compounded and made from inferior materials, lose their strength quickly when the can is opened for use. At subsequent bakings there will be noticed a falling off in strength. The food is heavy, and the flour, eggs and butter wasted.

It is always the case that the consumer suffers in pocket, if not in health, by accepting any substitute for the Royal Baking Powder. The Royal is the embodiment of all the excellence that it is possible to attain in an absolutely pure powder. It is always strictly reliable. It is not only more economical because of its greater strength, but will retain its full leavening power, which no other powder will, until used, and make more wholesome food.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and ends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

—School was dismissed Monday on account of Labor Day.

—S. A. Cutter and wife have gone to housekeeping in Johnny Peterson's house, on Fourth street.

—The Maple Plain school house looms up in good style from the train as we noticed one day this week.

—Swedeback & Erickson shipped a carload of lumber and material left over from their Waverly job, to this place yerterday.

—The East India Medical Co., of St. Paul. with a quartette of colored singers, gave two performences in the city hall this week.

—Harry Young received a bad cut on his ankle Tuesday morning. He was riding his pony when it slipped and fell on his leg.

—Under the supervision of G. F. Herman, Len Dedrick's new building is being rapidly pushed to completion, and will soon be ready for occupancy.

—Mrs. Chance has had the building to be occupied by the post office, next to the GAZETTE office, put in good repair. The removal of the post office will be quite a convenience to a large number of patrons. To some, of course, it will not.

—Squire Billings informs us that another consignment of Government literature, this time two volumns of Congressional records, neatly bound, have arrived at his office. Senator Washburne must be coaching the Squire to fill his shoes after next fall.

—The following clipping, from the Aitkin Age, will be of interest to some of our readers, as the parties were formerly Delanoites:

"Mrs. D. L. Young returned last Tuesday night from her visit to her Canadian home."

"Miss Hackett, who has been visiting her uncle, D. L. Young, returned to Kirkhoven, Minn., last night."

—The majority of the Board of Education seem to have taken the GAZETTE's advise and concluded to do things in accordance with law, and not in opposition to it. This is as it should be. The children were handed out the Free Text books on Monday morning without question, and so far as we have heard, school is doing well, except that many children from the country are not able to come until later.

—The following information will be of interest to many: "A driver of a vehicle who attempts to pass another on the road does so at his own peril, for if any accident occurs to the man he is passing, the rear driver is held responsible. This does not mean that the man in advance is not obliged to yield part of the road when notified, but that the burden of care rests on the rear driver, who is in position to see and avoid danger while the other is not. If an injury to the leading vehicle results from an attempt to pass, whether on a crowded thoroughfare or on a country road, the rear driver is held responsible."

—The necessity of having deeds and other like instruments placed on record is in fact yet to be realized by some people, although the realization may prove a sorrowful experience. Deeds for property which have changed hands years ago and have not yet appeared on record, the property is still standing in the name of the old owner. Let that owner be unprincipled and irresponsible and there is nothing to prevent him from giving a mortgage on the tract, or otherwise involving it, so that the purchaser in fact may have some difficulty in holding it, if he does not lose it entirely. It is a matter that cannot be attended to any too closely.—Ex.

Querries from Greenwood.

The Eagle stated that wheat would be 25cts higher if we had a Republican administration but a comparison of the facts does not substantiate the assertion: At threshing time, in 1891, wheat was sold at 94 cts, in '92 at 56 cts a drop of 38 cts under Harrison's administration. If it had continued to drop at the same rate until now what would the price be? Is a silver dollar that is not worth a dollar in the world's market not as much wild-cat money as a paper dollar would be? Does the Eagle ask Congress to act contrary to the wish of a large majority of the people as they expressed themselves at the last election and legislate in the interest of a few manufacturers and other monopolists? Did not the people express confidence in tariff reform when they rendered their verdict at the polls at the last election? More similar questions present themselves but this will do for the present.

Howard M. Atkins, County Attorney of Sherburne County, died at his home in Elk River on Tuesday, Sept. 5. He was born in Maine and was 55 years old.

The Monticello bridge matter seems to have been settled according to Judge Smith's decision after all instead of going according to the opinion drawn out of the Attorney General. We have an idea that the Attorney General's opinion on the Delano liquor license question as recently given in a county paper was a drawn out opinion, in answer to questions propounded and of no more consequence than was its mate. Opinions on particular points are entirely different from those given with a full knowledge of the situation, sometimes. We are informed that at Litchfield, last year license was collected twice, on these grounds. Drawn out opinsons want always do to tie to. Neither will a bluff always scare everybody. "You may fool all the people some of the time; you may fool some of the people all the time, but you can't fool all the people all the time."

Kennedy's Reply.

Owing to the fact that no one takes the Delano Eagle in the part of Hennepin county where business has necessitated my presence for the past few weeks, I did not know, until quite recently, that this item, clipped from that paper of the 24th ult., had been published, or I would have answered it long ere this:

LONG LAKE, Aug. 23.—The notorious Prof.(?) Kennedy appeared in our unusually quiet village one day last week and there was quite a discussion among the men about town whether to ride him out of town on a rail or simply give him a notice that his presence was not desired. Better counsel prevailed and he was given a notice to leave town at once, which he did.

I visited Long Lake on the 18th of last month and put up at Mr. Olson's hotel, where I remained two hours and met a goodly number of the most respectable citizens of that village and its immediate vicinity, including ex-Sheriff P. P. Swenson, every one of whom greeted me in the most cordial way and tarried to engage in friendly converse with me. The Lewis circular was read by Mr. Swenson, who pronounced it "very good," and was discussed all around with the utmost freedom. And if there was one person present who did not denounce Lewis as a traitor, who richly deserved the severe castigation he got in the cirular. I was not aware of it. The respectable people of Long Lake, like the respectable people elsewhere throughout the county, had watch Lewis digging my grave, and were not at all sorry to see him tumble into it.

But as I was driving out of town, and had gotten pretty well out, a foolish fellow about town came running up to the carriage with a note from a wag who writes for the papers. The note bore no signature, whatever, but purported to have come from the respectable citizens of Long Lake, at whose hands I have ever received the very kindest treatment.

I have lived in Hennepin county a long time and have always tried to merit the respect of my fellow men, and notwithstanding the efforts of unprincipled persons lately, among whom I am happy to know are few, very few, of the people of Long Lake, to brake me down, I have succeeded,as the following letter from the county commissioners of this county, similar to many others too numerous for publication, which I have received since Lewis revoked my certificate, will attest.

The respectable citizens of Long Lake, I dare say, do not very heartily approve of loafers about the stores insulting Mr. Olsen's guests, as they drive away, in their name.

WILLIAM KENNEDY.

Wilber House, Minneapolis, Minn., Sept. 5, 1893.

MINNEAPOLIS, Aug. 25, 1893.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:—

The bearer, William Kennedy, has been a resident of Hennepin county for many years and has always borne a high reputation for honor and priciple.

Mr. Kennedy is a kind and considerate teacher whose work in the school room has been very successful.

He is rich in the friends he has made by his upright life and courteous treatment of all who have come in contact with him.

We heartily recommend Mr. Kennedy as a young man whose educational standing and moral character entitled him to very high esteem, as a teacher, a scholar and a gentleman.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

PROGRESSIVE EUCHRE.

BY C. A. RUDDOCK.

It is progressive euchre—but how we progress
The skilled and the knowing don't care to confess,
They say it's all right if but PRIZES we win,
Though the game is much played in places of sin.
But one who has known the sad woes of the lost
Can tell us the way HE progressed at his cost.
To a little back room they led him the way
Nicely sheltered from view by night and by day,
At the—well, it may not be best to say where,
He seemed some surprised to find certain ones there;
But not there to gamble, as some people think,
Just to pass away time, though playing for drink.
They said to him kindly, "We're glad you are here,
You'll help us decide who shall pay for the beer."
They cunningly gave him the best of the game,
So he felt much at home, was glad that he came.
The hours seem like moments, so quickly they pass,
But on that sad night he drank his first glass.
Hence onward 'twas easy to drink and to play,
To joke with the vulgar, to sport with the gay.
As drunkard and gambler he's come to renown,
Though once thought as good as the best in the town,
He has now run his race and finds at the goal
The devil has EUCHRED him out of his soul!

PRESIDENT and Mrs. Grover Cleveland are now the happy parents of two girls. The youngest was born Sept. 9, at the White House.

THE Methodists of Iowa had a conference and resolved to vote the Third Party ticket this fall. They do not propose to support the party which announces that "prohibition is no test of Republicanism." Of course it is not oblagitory on a Methodist to vote a Prohibition, Republican or a Democratic ticket. He is supposed to be a free moral agent. Still this action will doubtless loose the Republican party thousands of votes in Iowa.

THE free text book business appears to have something wrong about it. Minneapolis teachers claim that their books in some instances 100 volumns have been appropriated by the board of instruction to be distributed to scholars. The Sherburne County Times says they were voted down in Clear Lake but advises the board to buy them in order to save trouble. Better wait until funds accumulate for that purpose. Some different law mere complete in details should supercede the present make shift.

Post Office Appointments.

Under the above caption H. Tanner, in last week's Waverly Tribune, says: "In taking editorial charge of the Wayerly Tribune I should like to say a few words to the reading and thinking public of Wright county on the subject of distribution of public patronage according to Democratic ideas."

"I believe that many political blunders have been committed in this county since the election of Major Baldwin last November and what is far more to the point, there are several hundred democrats in Wright county who are of the same opinion." He then gives several instances of appointments in the county after saying that he does "not object to the men who have been chosen by Major Baldwin as post masters but to the wanton insults that have been heaped upon veteran Democrats who have never failed their party in any emergency."

In winding up his column on the subject, he says: "We are determined that public offices shall not be subjected to servile brokerage, and he who uses the patronage that he controls for any purpose outside of the public interest must pay the penalty at the polls." This on the face of it appears to be pretty plain talk, and seems to blame major Baldwin with disrupting the Democratic party in Wright county. Mr. Tanner will have to hunt farther back than Major Baldwin's advent among us for some of his political blunders. Wright county democrats will not attribute to Congressman Baldwin alone, everything that has been done in the county in the past, not even since his election, last fall. If the democrats in every precinct in the county would see to it that their progressive, wide awake men, are sent as delegates to conventions to help nominate a ticket in a straightforward, manly way, for the purpose of electing every man on it, if possible, in an honest manner, and not barter and trade principles for places on a mongrel ticket they would be in better shape, and not so anxious to find a "scape-goat" for their failings.

Bonds vs. Red Tape.

Frequently is heard the expression "I signed Mr. So and So's bonds. It is only a matter of form" and many otherwise good business men have come to look upon the signing of bonds or the recommending to office or position of trust some individual about whom they know very little, or in some instances, who they would not trust with their own affairs, as a matter of little consequence. This is wrong and has often been demonstrated to the entire satisfaction of many an honest well meaning but too sympathizing individual. The first thing for a man to do is to look out for his own family and not go onto people's bonds promiscuously, or simply to have his name appear in public. Before signing bonds for the honesty and faithful discharge of duty of any individual, think over in your own mind if he is a person who has always lived up to the letter of the law and is always likely to do so; or if he is going into a business where he is always breaking the law, and violating the regulations and doing acts for which you may be called upon, any day as bondsman to pay the few hundred dollars set opposite your name. We have had several instances where men have been ruined by going on the bonds of others quite lately, McKinley, of Onio, is said to have lost his fortune in this way. There are instances in our midst where men have quite lately been called upon to make good the short comings of those for whom they signed years ago, as a matter of mere form, of red tape. It seems hard, especially so in these times to be called upon to pay over ones hard earned money, to give up his property, and deprive his family of perhaps many of the necessities of life, to make good the loss by carelessness, or otherwise, of those for whom bonds have been given. It looks foolish to us for people to sigh bonds for men that they know make a business of violating the contracts made every day in the year, thereby running voluntarily the chance of ruining themselves and bringing their families to poverty, when there are companies where bonds can be secured by the payment of a small sum, same as insurance on property can be obtained with the possible difference perhaps, that the principals would have to keep the letter of the law and of their contract in order to obtain this kind of bonds.

Judge Hooker Dead.

On Monday evening, Sept. 18, Judge Frederick Hooker, of Minneapolis, died at his home. He was well and favorably known throughout Wright county which belongs to the Fourth Judicial district over which he has so ably presided as Judge for several years past. On the 22d of February last he visited our village and made an able address in the city hall under the auspices of the Delano Washington's Birthday Association. He was then a type of health, and seemed to enjoy the occasion as well as any one present. His many friends here sympathize with the bereaved family. From the Minneapolis Evening Tribune we clip the following account of his life:

"Frederick Hooker was born in Chautauqua county, New York, April 6, 1845. His father was a farmer and he spent his early boyhood days attending school in winter and working in summer. At the age of 16 his determination to obtain an education was stronger than the parental home influence, which would, perhaps, have kept him at home, and he left to attend what was known as a select school, attending which he worked for his board, thus in a measure supporting himself. In his 18th year he attended an aecademy located near Chautauqua lake, New York. The winter of the following year he taught his first school, beginning in that profession and using it as a means to go on with his education. The following three years were spent at the State Normal School of Pennsylvania, and, continuing teaching, he was, the following two years, principal of the public school of Corry, Pa. He then moved to Warren, Pa., where he had charge of the public school for nearly three years. During these years of teaching he was spending his spare time in reading law and advanced so far that he was admitted to practice within two months from the time he left his last position as teacher. His first practice was at Warren, Pa., as a partner with Glen N. Scofield, then register of the treasury, at Washington. This was in 1870. Here he practiced till 1874, when he went to Denver, Col., but the investigation there, as a place to locate permantly, did not satisfy him, and after about a year, he decided to move to Minneapolis. Here he formed a co-partnership with Byron Southerland, which continued about one year, when he entered into partnership with Judge Rea, who was then probate judge. After this the firm became Rea, Hooker & Woolley, which firm he left when he was, in 1888, appointed to the newly created Fourth District judgship, to which, in the election of 1890, he was re-elected for the term of six years.

His family consists of wife and two unmarried daughters. Mrs. Hooker was Miss Mary Wells, of Crawford Co. Pa., who had been a classmate at sshool.

In politics the judge was alwas a Republican. He had never held any other office than that of judge."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 2, 1893.

"President Cleveland," said a southern Senator who had just left the White House, where he had been invited to attend a conference, "is not prejudiced against those democrats who are opposed to his financial policy as far as it has been announced; and he is fully aware of the extent of this opposition in the west and south. He believes that the wisdom of first repealing the purchasing clause of the Sherman silver law, which has been so greatly denounced by the business men of the country, and which was explicitly promised by the Chicago platform, will be so apparent after the entire financial policy of his administration shall have been made public that all divisions will soon be forgotten. The first step to be taken is, in his opinion, to stop the purchase of silver: but he bears no ill-will with those who differ with him, believing that they are as honest in their belief as he is in his. The only reason that he has not announced the financial policy of his administration is that it is not yet fully determined upon. Mind you, it is no task of a day, a week, or a month to re... construct the financial system of a country of 65,000,000 people, which has been growing from bad to worse under republican legislation, until it is today as bad as it could well be, and financial reform has become the most urgent necessity of the time Grover Cleveland has proven himself to be a man worthy to be trusted, and I can see no reason why every democrat should not repose the most implicit trust in him, in this emergency, even if their personal opinions do differ from his as to the means to be used to reach the desired end—the restoration of prosperity to the country at large, not to a few favored men, but to everybody. I am, and have always been, what is known as a silver man, but I shall unhesitatingly vote for the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman silver law."

The House added amendment after amendment to the new rules reported by the committee on Rules, until they stand as adopted almost the same as they were in the last House. Theoretically no democrat finds any fault with the liberality with which, the rules treat the right of the minority, but there is reason to fear that when the tariff bill, the bill for the repeal of the Federal election laws, and other measures against which the republicans will be disposed to fillibuster, gets before the House they will be found too lenient towards the minority. It is an old and true maxim that "the devil must be fought with fire," and many think that it would have been wisdom to have followed the precedent set by the republicans in the Fifty-first Congress and have made the rules stringent enough to control the minority when it was so desired.

"Much ado about nothing" is all the talk about the votes in the Senate this week. With twenty Senators absent the silver Senators defeat Senator Voorhees on two propositions—one to go into executive session while Senator Stewart was making his long speech, and the other to adjourn. The votes have absolutely no significance as far as the final result is concerned. The situation stands precisely as it did before—the bill will be debated a reasonable time unless an agreement is reached setting a time to vote, and then an attempt will be made to force a vote. To say how that attempt will result is merely to express an individual opinion or to make a guess.

Since President Cleveland made an address at the opening of the Pan-American Medical Congress, now in session, there has been a decided "let up" of the silly stories about his being in bad health, stories which never had any better foundation than the imaginations of their dissemmators.

Senater Morgan, of Alabama, this week introduced a concurrent resolution for the appointment of a joint committee on finance, to be composed of seven Senators and seven members of the House, for the purpose of making an examination into the financial and monetary condition of the Government and people of the United States. The resolution enumerates the following subjects to be investigated and reported upon by the committee: The full or partial demonetization of legal tender silver coins; the ratio which should be established between gold and silver; laws relating to legal tender and for the preventation of unjust discrimination in the several kinds of money; the repeal of the tax on State bank currency; the cause of the present embarrassed condition of the people and the national banks, and what further legislation is necessary to prevent national banks abusing their power under the law. The last subject is particularly interesting just now, in view of the statements that certain New York National banks made more than $1,000,000 by selling currency at a premium, while declining to cash depositors checks.

CORRESPONDENCE

SOUTH EAST FRANKLIN.

Uuless rain comes soon farmers will be obliged to quit plowing.

John Naslund has been building an addition to Louis Strauch's house the past two weeks.

The M. E. social at J. C. Johnson's Saturday evening was well attended. $9.40 was collected.

Miss Clara Hatch, of Minneapolis, is visiting with Mrs. Ed. Brandon this week.

Clark Sturman is going into the well business again if the drought continues. Business will doubtless be brisk.

(Too late for last week)

Threshing is done for this year. Farmers are now busy cutting corn and plowing getting ready for another crop.

Wm. Murphy, of Independence, has sold his farm, and is moving onto the old homestead in Franklin town. Bill says he wants to get among the Democrats.

Donald Cruikshank, of Buffalo, drove over Saturday afternoon with his family and visited with old acquaintances over Sunday.

A. L. Hosmer has bought 40 acres of land of C. M. Conzet, near Rockford Station. Consideration $800.

E. A. Cruikshank is going to Buffalo to work with his ...ng uncle on a well ma...e.

Mike Frank sold one of his teams this week to a Minneapolis party. There seems to be considerable demand for horses and farms at present though times are hard.

Jack Frost has been at the corn in the low places, but the present hot spell is fast bringing it to maturity and in a few more days it will be out of danger of frost.

Mrs. Belle Warberiton, of St. Paul, is visiting relatives and friends in this vicinity. She contemplates returning home about the middle of next week.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

The weather coutinues hot and dry and unless we have rain soon it will be almost impossible to plow.

The corn crop is very good and most all cut up and out of the way of frost.

Quite a number, of late, have been looking around Independence for farm lands.

Some say that times are getting better and business is picking up.

George Hosington and wife will go east in a few days to be absent about four weeks.

School Dist. 102 will have a new school building soon with modern improvements.

The W. R. C. of Maple Plain will have a "hard times" social about Oct. 10th, providing business revives up a little. Would say we expect nothing but "hard time" socials for the next three months.

A good many of the frrmers have sowed rye this fall. It is a sure crop and good for man and beast.

The new school house at Maple Plain is a fine looking building. There has been four new school buildings erected in Independence within a year.

Jack Conover, of Minneapolis, was rusticating in Independence part of last week.

W. H. Kennedy is back from the G. A. R. Encampment and the World's Fair. He says he found it hot and dry at Indianapolis.

LONG LAKE.

DIED—Addison S. Gardner in his 51st year. Mr. Gardner was born in the State of New York, and during his boyhood emigrated with his parents to Wisconsin. Upon the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion in 1861 he enlisted in the First Regiment of the Wisconsin Volunteers, as a private. His regiment belonged to the Western Army and with it won renown as a valiant organization, and the subject of this sketch was one of the bravest in the organization and was soon promoted and in the course of his advancement served as 3d Lieut. finally 1st Lieut. He served in twenty battles during the war, among them the battle of Chicamauga and in the various battles proceeding and following that engagement, being wounded at Chicamauga: At the close of his service he was an officer on Gen. Polish Beet Sugar Makers.

Count Lubidnski, who was at the head of the party of Polish gentlemen who visited this section a short time ago for the purpose of considering the advisibility of locating a large beet sugar manufacturing plant, was seen by the JOURNAL man in Chicago yesterday. The count, with a number of other prominent Poles, makes his headquarters at the Polish cafe at the World's Fair. He says that meetings are now being held by these gentlemen to decide upon the locality and the details for establishing the plant. The general sentiment seems at present to be in favor of Minneapolis, and Frank Grygla, of this city, is at the fair working among his countrymen to secure the location of their plant for this city. The party will return to Minneapolis, early in October, when some final action will be taken. According to the Count, indications are very much in favor of Minneapolis.—Minneapolis Journal.

DID you ever notice the weakness women have for marking their letters "personal?" They seem to think that by so marking the envelope the letter will go to its destination quicker, through the same line of reasoning which some years ago led women to write on envelopes "in haste," supposing that the postman would immediately start on a run with them. This habit of writing "personal" sometimes leads to very embarrassing results. A purely business communication addressed in unmistakable feminine hand and marked "personal" has been known to raise a lively row in a usually peaceful family.

Train Robbed.

KENDALLVILLE, Ind., Sept. 12.—Lake Shore express train No. 14 was held up and robbed at Kesler Siding, west of here, this morning. Just before the train reaches the station there is a stretch of timber land, near which is a switch. As the train reached the latter the engineer saw a red light ahead. His hand was at the lever in an instant, and as the train slowed up and the red light grew nearer the engineer saw a group of men. In front of the red light the train came to a stop. A dozen men sprang into the cab and leveled rifles at the heads of the engineer and fireman. The two railroad men stood stupefied as the rifle barrels gleamed in their faces and the robbers said, "Throw up your hands."

The fireman was peaceful, but the engineer was not and was shot in the shoulder. The rest of the trainmen were intimidated, and then the express car was attacked.

Dynamite was exploded under the express car and a huge hole blown in the side. THE SILVER DEBATE.

Synopsis of the Discussion in the United States Senate.

On the 5th Mr. Peffer (pop., Kan.) concluded his argument in support of his free coinage amendment to the repeal bill. He was followed by Mr. Stewart (rep., Nev.) in opposition to the repeal of the Sherman act.

Touching on the demonetization act of 1873 he intimated that Senator Sherman's vote against that bill was because he knew it would pass and wanted to conceal from the senate a knowledge of the fact that it omitted the silver dollar from the list of coins. He claimed to have shown that the leading members of the two houses who were present during the consideration of the bill were ignorant of the fact that the silver dollar was omitted in the codification of the mint laws.

"The senate and the country must judge," said Senator Stewart, "whether a fair opportunity was afforded the members of the two houses to know of the omission of the silver dollar from the list of coins. No reference was made in the debate in the senate to the omission of the silver dollar." He said the fact that Senator Sherman, who did so much to secure the recommendation of the gold standard by the Paris conference, introduced in 1868 a bill with a harmless title adopting the gold standard, claiming that the gold standard was an American idea—that he had charge o the mint bill from beginning to end and failed to inform the senate that it demonetized silver—was most astonishing. The legislation was not demanded by the people. They knew nothing of it. It remained a profound secret, so far as the masses of the people were concerned, for more than two years.

Coming to the recent election, Senator Stewart said the contest between the two great parties was a sham battle over the tariff and the force bill to secure power to be used for another and very different purpose. He had told the people, he said, that it made no difference which party succeeded. The result would be the same. The power and patronage of the administration would be used to destroy silver.

Referring to the Sherman act Senator Stewart said that notwithstanding the numerous violations of it by the executive department it had added $150,000,000 of legal tender money to the currency of the country. There was no evidence that the Sherman act had up to this time inflicted any injury upon the country.

The banker's panic, he said, was inaugurated to force congress to demonetize silver. The president in his message failed to inform congress that the apprehended evils which produced the panic existed only in the imagination of the bondholders, the bankers and their newspaper organs, who had created the present distress for their own selfish and sordid purposes.

The immediate duty of the hour is to relieve that distress. There is an honest remedy and a dishonest remedy. The honest remedy is to restore silver; or, if that could not be done, to utilize the silver in the treasury by issuing silver certificates on it, and by issuing enough greenbacks to relieve the distress. The dishonest remedy is to pass the repeal bill, to sanctify to infamous act of 1873 and to fasten a perpetual gold standard upon the country.

Before the conclusion of Mr. Stewart's remarks the senate adjourned.

On the 6th Mr. Stewart (rep., Nev.) continued his speech. After talking for an hour he paused for a rest and Mr. Teller (rep., Col.) came to his aid by suggesting the absence of a quorum. The roll was called and (a majority of senators trooping in from the cloak rooms) fifty-nine senators answered.

Mr. Teller explained his reason for calling attention to the absence of a quorum. He insisted that those who opposed the measure should be heard and that the friends of the measure should be in the chamber while it was being discussed. There had not been a member of the finance committee who was in favor of the bill in the chamber for the last hour. He intended while this debate went on to see that there was a quorum present.

Mr. Stewart then resumed the floor, and, showing no symptoms of bringing his speech to a close at 5 p. m., Mr. Voorhees (his patience apparently exhausted) asked him whether he wished to continue his remarks during the evening. The reply was that he hoped to be excused. Senator Voorhees then said that with the senator's permission he would move to proceed to executive business. The motion was agreed to.

On the 7th Mr. Stewart (rep., Nev.) postponed the continuation of his speech until Mr. Walthall (dem., Miss.) had spoken.

Mr. Walthall then argued in favor of bimetallism. He expressed his readiness to cooperate in prompt action on the bill, and suggested that there was a simple mode of arriving at prompt action. If the declarations of policy, he said, which the substitute contained were embodied in the form of an enactment he believed a vote could be reached in half the time. He argued that the bill should be addressed to some other legislation than the mere repeal of the Sherman act; that congress should "strike at the root, not merely at the fruit." If it were found that the Sherman law, and not the McKinley law, had been the culminating atrocity of recent legislation, haste should be made to supplement the educational feature of the campaign of 1892 by teaching the people now that that campaign had been conducted to success on a mistaken issue.

Mr Stewart then resumed his remarks, opening with a tirade against the owners of two New York newspapers for presuming to dictate the policy of the senate and reflect public sentiment. Then he took up Mr. Voorhees' record on the silver question and quoted from his autobiography in the Congressional Directory to show his inconsistency. He read documents and newspaper clippings to show the tariff and the force bill were the overshadowing issues in the presidential campaign.

At 4:15 Mr. Stewart announced that he would now close, saying: "There are several branches of the subject which I have not yet touched and which I wish to speak upon, but I will close this speech here."

On the 8th Mr. Faulkner (dem., W. Va.) spoke on the silver question. He announced his intention to vote for the repeal bill, but in doing so expressed his belief in silver as a money metal and declared his intention of bringing in an amendment to the present bill providing for the coinage of $3,000,000 of silver per month until the aggregate circulation of silver of the country shall reach $800,000,000. No evidence was furnished, he said, to show that the charge so freely made, that the purchase of 4,500,000 ounces of silver per month has been the chief disturbing element in our financial system was true, and he contended that the want of confidence which had been manifest by the people was a want of confidence in our financial institutions rather than in any particular kind of money.

Mr. Turpie (dem., Ind.) advocated bimetallism. The issue which confronted congress was not whether silver should be further used as money, but whether its purchase should be continued. The very act of purchasing was a discrimination against silver, because gold was brought to the treasury. He predicted that an epoch of free trade was about to appear and of freedom of the ballot, and there could be no doubt that when these two things were secured the free coinage of silver would necessarily be brought about.

Mr. Jones (dem., Ark.) favored the repeal of the Sherman act, not in part, but the whole. He would vote against the pending bill and would resist its enactment into law as long as possible unless it were coupled with some measure recognizing silver and providing for an expansion of the volume of the country's money.

On the 9th Mr. Teller (rep., Col.) spoke on the repeal bill. He began by referring to the "lecturing" which the senate was receiving from the newspaper press of the country. Senators, he said, were ordered, as if they had masters, to proceed without deliberation, to do with hot haste that which in the judgment of if not a majority at least a very respectable minority of the senators would be a very disastrous thing to do. Not only had senators been told that they must vote at once but it had been asserted over and over again that senators who represented states fortunate enough to be filled with mineral wealth were representing their individual interests and had not even the right to vote on the question.

Mr. Teller then quoted from New York papers as to the alleged pressure which the administration was to exert on the house and senate for the passage of the repeal bill. He read a dispatch from the Washington correspondent of the New York American stating that the negotiations for the surrender of the silver democrats in the senate were at an end, that the administration insisted on unconditional surrender; that Senator Vest was now the angriest man against the administration that could be found in the country and had threatened to join in delaying action.

Mr. Teller yielded to Mr. Vest (dem., Mo.), who said: "If there is any ultimatum coming from the president it is not known to myself nor to any of my associates. However much we may differ from the president none of us shall ever come to the degrading conclusion that he will send a message to United States senators seeking to control their action. As to what is stated in regard to my action about delay it is simply and unconditionally false, and the product of newspaper imagination incited by newspaper rivalry."

Mr. Teller then made some sarcastic allusions to what "purported to be a telegram from the president of the United States to a member of congress congratulating him and his associates on the passage of the repeal bill by the house of representatives." The speaker wanted to know, (in well-feigned astonishment) if anybody could tell him that "the president of the United States was guilty of that gross breach of public decency? Why, of course it was a newspaper yarn and a newspaper falsehood. The president of the United States attempting to procure legislation, having carried it from his summer home at Buzzard's Bay, sent his thanks—we are told—to Mr. Wilson and his associates. Incomprehensible! Impossible! What further need do you require of the mendacity of the press?"

Mr. Teller then addressed himself to the Sherman act, alleging that under it for over two years the country had been prosperous and that its only influence had been beneficial.

Before the conclusion of Mr. Teller's remarks the senate adjourned.

On the 11th Mr. Pugh (dem., Ala.) spoke in opposition to the repeal bill. He said it was the determined and unalterable purpose of the opponents of repeal to stand upon their convictions of public duty and fidelity to their pledges to the people whom they represented, and who had honored them with their confidence on the vital question, until their physical strength was exhausted.

Mr. Teller (rep., Col.) resumed his speech against the repeal bill. He asserted, and he believed it could be demonstrated, that if it had not been for a preconcerted effort in the money center of the country to prevent it, the 1st of September would have seen better times in the finances of the country than the people were experiencing today. The calling of congress did not relieve the country; in fact, the condition became worse from the time congress was called in extraordinary session. Mr. Teller said he would at some other time give to the senate his conception of the cause for the recent distressed condition. In his opinion it was due to legislative misconduct.

Mr. Teller next directed himself to stock operations. A New York paper had published daily for some time the depreciation in value of stocks or the destruction of values occasioned by the Sherman law, as the paper said. The paper had finally got the amount up to $700,000,000. In his opinion a great many stocks were selling on the market to-day for more than they were worth. He cited Northern Pacific, which he said had fallen from 70 to 17. It was said all the great owners connected with it unloaded when it was 70. That company had $250,000,000 of indebtedness; $75,000,000 held in Germany; a great amount owned in Holland and England. He then instanced Erie stock. He did not suppose anybody pretended that Erie would ever pay out. He next referred to Reading. Did any intelligent man believe that any of those three great concerns were solvent? Did not everybody know they were insolvent? This disturbance did not come from the Sherman law. It came from the misconduct of officials. Mr. Teller said he did not mean to say criminal misconduct, but that they did not deal fairly with their investors. It behooved congress, he said, when it came to legislate upon this subject, to find the cause of the evil, and, if within its power, to remove the evil.

Mr. Teller then yielded to a motion to go into executive session, saying that he had reached a point where he could quit for the present and he would take up another branch of the subjec some other day.

They First Shoot a Cashier—Daring Daylight Robbery Committed at Delta, Col., by Outlaws—One Escapes Pursued by a Posse—Stolen Money Recovered.

DELTA, Col., Sept. 9.—Cashier A. T. Blachly, of the Farmers' and Merchants' bank, was shot dead while defending his trust Thursday morning by three robbers. Two of the robbers are dead and the third will soon be in the hands of the officers of the law, who are in hot pursuit.

Three men had been seen lounging about the bank for a day or two without any apparent business. About 10:45 o'clock Thursday morning, when no customers were present, they entered the bank and covered those present with their guns. The spokesman, presenting his revolver at the head of Cashier Blachly, demanding that he hand over what funds there were in the bank. Mr. Blachly refused. The robber without any further warning fired, killing him instantly. The three men then grabbed all the cash in sight, amounting to perhaps $1,000. Then they started for the outside, where their horses were hitched.

W. Ray Simpson, who keeps a hard ware store near the bank, heard the shot and seizing his loaded Winchester got into the street in front of the bank just as the three robbers were rushing out. He opened fire at once and with the first shot one of the robbers fell dead. He fired again and another robber dropped. The third had time to mount his horse and start down the road for the country. By this time the bank was the center of an excited multitude of citizens. As soon as they ascertained what had occurred they rushed to their homes, secured horses, guns and ammunition and set off after the fleeing robber.

A portion of the posse in pursuit of the third robber returned Thursday evening and reported they had lost the trail in the mountains and that the man would probably escape, as he was well mounted. The dead men had been stopping at one of the hotels for several days under the names of James G. Bradley and Clarence Bradley. James was recognized as a member of a gang which robbed a bank at Tellurido, Col., three or four years ago. A reward of $500 has been offered for the missing robber. Cashier Blachly leaves a widow and several children and was an old resident of the county.

BIG FIRE AT PULLMAN.

The Famous Car Company's Lumber Yards Destroyed — Loss Estimated at $250,000.

CHICAGO, Sept. 12.—Over one-half of the great Pullman lumber yards was turned into ashes inside of an hour Monday night. The flames started in the southeast corner of the yards from an overheated steampipe in a dry kiln. At 2 o'clock a. m. the flames had burned the district from One Hundred and Eighth to One Hundred and Eleventh streets and from Stevens street to Lake Calumet. It was thought almost to that hour that the fire was under control, but a few minutes before 2 an additional call for help reached Chief Swenie and he dispatched a special train with four steamers which had been standing in the Illinois Central yards for over an hour waiting for the signal to move. This was taken as an indication that the blaze was again spreading, threatening the immense repair and car shops.

At 3 o'clock the fire was reported under control. The loss is estimated at $250,000; insured. The engines were sent from Chicago in case the water in the tower should give out.

TOWN DESTROYED BY FIRE.

Colfax, Wis., Reported to Have Been Burned—Forest Fires Raging.

CHIPPEWA FALLS, Wis., Sept. 12.—This city and vicinity have been covered with smoke for several days from forest fires, which are devastating sections of northern Wisconsin. The fires have continued at intervals for two months. A great many farmers have suffered losses of hay, grain and buildings. A report has reached here that Colfax, a small town on the Wisconsin Central 21 miles from here, was destroyed by fire. No word can be secured by telegraph, and it is supposed telegraphic communication has been cut off. There has been no rain here for six weeks and the country is as dry as tinder.

IN MANY TONGUES.

God's Praises Are Sounded at the Parliament of All Religions—Inspiring Scenes at Its Opening in Chicago.

CHICAGO, Sept. 13.—A processional in which the religions of the world were represented marked the opening of the world's parliament of religions at the Art Institute. It was a processional that had a world of meaning in it; one that would have been impossible not many years ago. Jew marched with Gentile and Catholic marched with Protestant. The religious beliefs of India, of China and of Japan were represented, as well as those of the English-speaking nations. All, attired in their priestly robes and wearing the insignia of their office, marched in peace and fellowship to the platform, while the audience rose and cheered at the sight. First came Cardinal Gibbons, escorted by President Bonney. Then came Mrs. Potter Palmer and Mrs. Charles Henrotin, representing the board of lady managers, and then the following with their suites:

Archbishop Redwood, of New Zealand; Archbishop Dionysius Latas, of Zante, Greece; Rev. John Henry Barrows, of Chicago; Archbishop Feehan; Count A. Bernstorff, of Berlin; Dr. Carl von Bergen, of Sweden; Prof. C. N. Chaharar, H. Dharmapala and P. C. Mozoomdar, of India; Rev. Augusta J. Chapin, of Chicago; Rev. Alexander D. McKenzie; Pung Quang Yu, of China; Dr. E. G. Hirsch, of Chicago; Miss Jeanne Serabji and Khersedji Laugraua, of Bombay; Bishop B. W. Arnett, and Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant.

Even more inspiring was the scene when the whole vast audience arose and joined in singing "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow," and later when Cardinal Gibbons led those of all nations and all religions in reciting the Lord's Prayer.

There was not a vacant seat in the hall and the walls were fringed with people standing up when Clarence Eddy took his seat at the organ and played a couple of selections preliminary to the processional with which the proceedings were opened.

President Bonney made the address of welcome. He said they should all give thanks for being able to take part in so grand a congress, one that so fully exemplified peace and progress and which would have so great an influence on the world. He said they all met with the greatest respect for the religions of each other. While all met as men on an equal plane, there was a desire to treat everyone with that formality and courtesy to which his rank in his own church entitled him. After reviewing the programme of the congress Mr. Bonney welcomed all in the name of the brotherhood of religion.

Rev. John Henry Barrows, chairman of the committee on organization, then addressed the congress. He said that this meeting had become a grand new factor in the history of the human race that would never be obliterated. Never before had such a congress been undertaken, and not long ago it would have been deemed impossible to carry it to successful completion. The man who would advance his own faith must first discover the truths in other faiths. He hoped the congress would prove more spiritual and ethical than theological.

After an address of welcome by Archbishop Feehan, of Chicago, Cardinal Gibbons spoke. He said that though all did not agree in matters of faith, there was one platform on which all were united, that was chairity, humanity and benevolence. He said he could not impress too strongly on every one that each was his brother's keeper. That was the whole theory of humanity. If Christ had cried with Cain: "Am I my brother's keeper?" we would still be walking in darkness.

The cardinal was followed by Rev. Augusta J. Chapin, who welcomed the congress on behalf of woman, and she in turn by the Archbishop of Zante.

Other speakers were Protop Chunder Mazoombar, of Calcutta, President Higinbotham, of the Columbian exposition, Pung Quang Yu, of the Chinese legation at Washington, Prince Wolhousky, of Russia, Rt. Rev. Reuchi Shibata, of Japan, Count A. Bernstoff, of Berlin, Rev. G. Bonet Maury, of France, Archbishop Redwood, of New Zealand and H. Dharmapala, of India.

At the afternoon session Dr. Carl von Bergen, of Stockholm, spoke for the Lutherans of his country. He was followed by Prof. Minas Tcheraz, of London, the leader of the Armenian church; Prof Chakravarti, of Allahabad, the distinguished theosophist, was another of the East Indians who rather captured the day by their learned eloquence. Dr. Alfred Momeri spoke for the church of England. Other speakers were Swami Dvivi Kananda (a Brahminical Hindoo educated at Harvard), Principal Grant, of Canada; Miss Jeanne Serabji, of Bombay; B. B. Aagarkar, of Bombay, and Virchand Gaudhi, leader in the jain faith.

PRAYED FOR THE BABY.

The Chaplain of the House Implores Divine Blessing on Little Ruth's Sister.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13.—Another brief half hour session was held by the house with less than a hundred members present. The chaplain prayed for the little daughter in the white house as follows:

"We thank Thee that Thou hast gladdened the nation and the home of the chief executive with a little one. May the life and health of the mother be conserved, and the life of the little one be spared that she may attain the high ideal of womanhood illumined by her mother, and may meekness, modesty, mildness, gentleness and all the virtues that pertain to the highest type of womanhood be hers, and may the family of the white house become a beacon in the wilderness to all the families throughout the length and breadth of the land."

Will Await the Action of Congress.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13.—Attorney General Olney has instructed United States marshals to take no further steps for the enforcement of the Geary law pending specific instructions to the contrary from Washington. These instructions do not apply, however, to the Chinese already in progress of deportation by due process of law.

ABOUT HORSE TRADES.

How a Bay Was Sold Seven Times and Maybe More.

They were talking about horse trades. The man with the gray chin whiskers said that he had been trading horses for forty years, and he allowed that he knew as much about the business as any one. However, when he was down at Lockport he heard of a scheme that knocked silly everything he had ever done or had ever had done to him.

Pressed for the story, he said: "A couple of sharp young fellows came to Lockport a while ago with seven horses and one consumptive mule. They hired a little shanty on the towpath of the canal and announced that they were ready to swap horses at the slightest provocation. Six of the seven horses they had were old and weather-beaten nags that were worth about $10 apiece. The other was a nice-looking bay, fat and handsome. The mule cut no figure at all.

"One day a canal man came along and stopped at the shanty in which the seven horses and the one mule were eating their heads off. He announced that he wanted to buy a team. He looked over the stock, picked out one of the best of the six spavined horses and the nice-looking bay. But one of the members of the firm was in sight during the deal. The other one hid in the shanty. The canaler offered one hundred dollars for the team and, after much haggling, the offer was accepted. The buyer put the team on the towline and started off. After he had got well on his way, the man who had been hiding in the shanty came out, hitched up one of the remaining horses to a sulky and started off briskly.

"The canaler drove along for about two miles and then the bay horse suddenly balked. He used every argument known to men who drive horses along the towpath to get the bay to go, but it would not budge. He worked for an hour and at the end of that time was in a state of anger that can better be imagined than described. Just at this juncture a man drove up the towpath. He was riding in a sulky and had a pretty poor horse. He asked the canaler what was the matter, and even went so far as to get down and try to get the bay started. His efforts were unavailing, however, and, as a last resort, he offered to take the horse off the canal man's hands. He said that he had plenty of time and could wait until the horse got ready to start, whereas time was money to the canal man. He offered to trade for $50 to boot. The canaler demurred at this. They haggled for a time and finally came to an agreement whereby the canaler gave the man on the sulky $35 to boot. The canaler hitched up the new horse and went along. The man who had the bay waited until it was ready to start. The he put it between the shafts of the sulky and drove back to the shanty. He was the man who had been in hiding. The firm got $135 for two of the poorest horses. They worked that bay off and got it back seven times. The bay was sure to balk within a few miles and they knew it. For all I know they may be working the same scheme yet."—Buffalo Express.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime, and read the Label.

IN THE WOODS.

The bobolink sings at the break of day,
The whip-poor-will sings at night;
The chickadee chirps, and the branches sway;
And the songs are bright, and the songs are gay,
And the shadows are put to flight.
For its' singing among the swinging boughs,
It's singing among the grass:
And it's one sings high, and it's one sings low,
And it's one sings fast and another slow,
With a trill and a rush of eager notes,
That thrill as they pour from their tiny throats
As the hours of summer pass.

The bobolink builds in a lonely lea,
The whip-poor-will makes no nest:
The chickadee builds in a hollow tree,
With a round little door that few can see,
And he thinks his home the best.
And it's singing among the swinging boughs,
It's singing among the grass;
And it's one sings here and it's one sings there,
While a moss-grown rock has a merry pair,
With some in the grass and some on the trees,
And a trill and a thrill that stirs the breeze
As the hours of summer pass.

WERE THEY MARRIED?

It Doesn't Say So But We Think They Were.

Through the pines, across the tiny lake, she could see the team standing at the back door of the Princess Anne hotel.

"Full an hour before it goes back to Norfolk," she thought. "How on earth shall we ever get throught it without saying more than we mean?"

"What a dreadfully short time an hour is," he said.

She started.

"Yes," she said, cordially. "Is it not? Do you really have to take the New York boat to-night."

"If I get back in time to lecture to my young ladies Saturday morning," he said. "Seems queer for girls to care about diseases of the skin, does it not?"

"Not at all," she said, promptly. "I have thought a great deal about acne myself, though I am not a medical student."

He looked with amused incredulity at her smooth, daintly flushed cheeks.

"How do you treat it?" he asked.

"Medicine is surely a safe topic," she thought. "Why," she said hesitatingly, "I took liquor potass. arsen.—is that right?—internally and put a horrid sort of paste on every night for a week."

"What results?" he asked.

"Judge for yourself," she answered, drooping her long lashes and letting a little more flush creep into her cheeks.

They were sitting beneath the pines on an upturned boat; she had realized that the surroundings in themselves were entirely too conducive to unconventionality, and now felt irritated for having added to their influence. She returned vigorously to her safe topic.

"Tell me about women medical students. Do you like teaching them? Are they as bright, really, as your boys?"

"Oh! as a rule, they are good students," he said. "Quiz day is a real lark; they rattle twice as easily as men. I enjoy pouncing down on a sleepy-looking girl and seeing her get scared." He stretched his long legs out and laughed with lazy pleasure at the memory.

"How can you?" she said, reproachfully. "I am sure the poor things have a hard enough time anyway and you ought not to be so cruel to them."

"I am not hard on them, really," he said, apologetically. When it comes to examinations I ask 'em easy questions about eczema and pass every one."

"Do they like you?" she asked, adding, mentally: "Why can't I keep away from personalities to-day"

"Oh! yes," he answered. "I hear I am quite a pet with them. But I did not come down to talk of women in medicine. I came down to see if you would marry me."

"Oh, I can't," she gasped.

He got up, walked slowly around one or two pine trees, then came back and stood before her with his hands in his pockets and his chin well down in his collar. When he did so at home his sisters said despairingly: "It's no use; Dick's mind is made up the other way."

"Why not?" he asked. A tingle of irritation passed through her. "I never knew before," thought she, "that he was conceited."

Aloud she said promptly and clearly: "Because I have not the faintest desire to do so."

He sat down by her again, picked up a stick and poked the laurel bush near him thoughtfully.

"I love you," he said, "as much as I know how."

"They usually say that first," she said quickly.

He threw back his head and laughed.

"Do they ?" he said.

She flushed in intense indignation. "Evidently this whole matter seems to you a flippant joke," she said, bitterly.

"Virginia!" he exclaimed, and then added, quietly: "You have known the whole state of affairs for a long time, I am sure. My great desire to be with you, my happiness when with you, have been patent to all. Sometimes, after a peculiarly happy time together—such as we had at Bar Harbor last summer—I have felt sure that you loved me. It hardly seems as if we could have had such days as those unless you did."

He paused and looked intently at her. She met his gaze with a steady look which had so often delighted and interested him—it seemed so inconsistent with certain other of her traits.

"How chilly this air is, even here," she said.

"You are cold?" he asked, rising quickly.

"No, I am not," she answered, changing her mind. "Sit down. I wonder how it would do to be perfectly honest with you?"

"I think it would do first rate," he answered.

"I never tried it before," she said, thoughtfully.

He could not repress a faint smile. "This seems to be different from the others in several minor points," he said, and then wished he had not.

"It is certainly too chilly," she said, rising. They walked half across the bridge. He stopped in the sunshine and leaned on the railing.

"Much warmer here, isn't it? Now are you going to be honest with me?"

"Well," she said, "this is how it is. I don't know really whether I love you or not. I have never been in love before."

"I am glad to hear it," he said, gravely.

"Why," she said, startled, "have you?"

"Not since I was a boy," he answered. "But go on." You don't know how you regard me—"

"There are some reasons why I could think either way. If I did care, I should know it, I think. Girls who care say they could not be happy doing anything but marrying, while I could go on and do any number of things—be just as I am for a long time, and then study, oh, all sorts of things! I might even, after I got past—after people stopped saying I was attractive—like to study medicine. You do have some girls like me in your class, don't you?"

"We have some pretty girls," he said, "who apparently have no real love for the work."

"There!" she cried. "Don't you see how just the way you say that makes a reason for me to be afraid to marry you? Now, your queerness, and abruptness, and the not being sure whether you are making fun of me, are half fascinating, but perhaps if I were married to you they would irritate me and we should be dreadfully unhappy.

"Could you ever believe that I made fun of you?" he asked. She did not answer, but gazed down into the water with unseeing eyes.

"This getting married is a great problem," she said, with a sigh.

"Yes," he answered, heartily, "one of the most urgent and important questions of the day." She looked up at him uneasily; he looked down tenderly and continued: "So urgent that I long to have it settled in the little time left before the train goes."

"Oh!" she said, "you don't realize how seriously and earnestly one should think it over."

"Yes, I do," he answered. "I myself have pondered on it long and carefully."

"So," she said, "you had to argue yourself into it, to work yourself up to believing you cared for me! This wind really is as keen as in Boston. Come, let's go and get warm."

They walked on in silence toward the hotel. As they crossed the platform and picked their way among the boxes and bundles a man who was busied with a paste pot looked up with an amused smile at their solemn progress. She caught it.

"Everything is being labeled," she said, inanely.

"Yes," he answered, "except me. Am I to be tagged, 'rejected' or 'accepted?'"

She stood still and looked at him with indignant contempt.

"Your train leaves so soon perhaps I had better say good-by here; you must have some final arrangements to make. I hope it will not be too windy for a pleasant trip back to New York. Good-by."

He took her extended hand. "As you say," he answered, "we must make some final arrangements. You know I love you? Will you marry me?"

"Can't you see how incompatible our natures are?" she cried. "I so earnest and warm-hearted, and you so flippant and cold."

The man among the boxes grew interested. He chose a box nearer them for his next label.

She lowered her voice. "Do you know," she asked, "that you are still holding my hand?"

"Yes," he said, "I know it, though I am so cold and indifferent. Will you marry me?"

The train bell rang. "They must have changed the time," she said. "Run or you will be left!"

As the forlorn little train pulled out they walked down to the beach.

"You will have to wait for to-night's train, and won't that make you miss your boat. How about those poor girls and eczema?"

"They will have to get on without me, poor things," he said. "But it is the patients who have eczema, you know. Perhaps I shall stay over Sunday now."

She looked at him with delighted eyes. "What!" she said, "two whole days for us to be happy in!"—Katherine Bates, in Kate Fields' Washington.

MR. AND MRS. WORDSWORTH.

An Amusing Story Told of an Ill-Dressed Poet Laureate.

Mrs. Wordsworth, with all her beauty of expression, was undoubtedly a plain woman; and this is what may be called putting the fact into plain language. But if she could make no boast of good looks, neither was the poet himself remarkable for beauty of feature or comeliness of form; while his extreme inattention to little matters of detail in dress was always more or less marked.

I cannot forbear quoting an amusing incident lately told me by an old friend (a grandniece of Mrs. Wordsworth) who, when a child in her parents' home at Durham, remembers one afternoon an announcement being made to her mother that a man wished to speak to her; and that as he appeared very tired, and seemed to have walked a long distance, he had been accommodated with a seat in the kitchen. My friend's mother, like most country residents, was not unaccustomed to interviewing people of all sorts and conditions, and having finished the letter upon which she was engaged, proceeded leisurely to the kitchen, expecting perhaps some application for employment, or, possibly, to hear a tale of sickness or distress among her humbler neighbors. Her dismay may be imagined when, seated hat in hand upon a Windsor chair, and absently contemplating the weights of the Dutch clock upon the opposite wall, she discovered the poet laureate.

My informant, who was scarcely of an age to appreciate the beauty of the poet's conversation, confesses to an industrious though fruitless attempt on her part to count the number of buttons missing from the distinguished visitor's gaiters on this interesting occasion.—Cornhill Magazine.

Lost Through His Love for Fun.

In one of the old castles of northern England visitors are shown two rooms which are connected with each other by a singular mechanism. Each room is adjoined by an alcove, used as a sleeping apartment, and the floors of the adjoining alcoves turn on a pivot in the center of the partition wall. This ingenious device was the invention of one of the ancestors of the present proprietor, who was somewhat of a wag and found great pleasure in frightening and mystifying his guests. When one had gone to bed in the green room and the other in the blue the floors were turned on their pivots and on awakening the visitor found himself in strange quarters with clothes that were not his own. It is said that this fun-loving lord lost a rich inheritance by thus disturbing the restful moments of a wealthy aunt, who never forgave the trick her nephew played upon her.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH.

—Iowa Wesleyan college recently finished a $40,000 chapel.

—The contribution of the Salvation Army in the United States during the recent self-denial week aggregated $35,000.

—In Colorado there was not a single Baptist church forty years ago. Now there are sixty churches and five thousand members.

—The archdiocese of Baltimore has had but nine Roman Catholic archbishops, and three of them were converts from the Protestant Episcopal church.

—The new Young Men's Christian association building at Paris cost $200,000, $80,000 of which was contributed by James Stokes of New York and his family.

—There are three Catholic and eight Protestant missions, among which is that founded by Bishop Taylor, in the Congo region. There are twenty-eight stations and ninety-five missionaries.

—Moses, the great lawgiver and reputed author of the first five books of the Bible, died on the anniversary of his birth, August 27, 1705 B. C., being exactly one hundred and twenty years old.

—The seventy-seventh annual report of the American Bible society shows that during the past year the receipts were $578,930.76, and expenditure $560,537.01. The sum of $155,238.32 was appropriated for the foreign department during the present year.

—In New York city are found over 3,000 physicians to minister to 1,900,000 persons, while in the foreign field for 1,000,000,000 there are only about 350 medical missionaries, or one to 3,000,000—that is one to the combined population of New York, Brooklyn and Jersey City.

—The prince of Wales recently conferred the order of St. John on two Methodist nurses in London—Sister Rita, lady superintendent of Wesley Deaconess institute, and Sister Emma, sister in charge of the Children's Home hospital.

—The trustees of the Church of the Covenant and of the Brick church, New York city, two of the wealthiest Presbyterian churches in the United States, have decided to consolidate. Under the proposed plan the Church of the Covenant will cease to exist.

—Rev. Elijah Kellogg, whose "Spartacus to the Gladitors" has been so many schoolboys' declamation for many years, is still preaching on Sundays in his church at Harpswell, Me., although he has passed his eightieth birthday. He has done a wonderful amount of good among the fishermen of Casco bay in his long career. He expects soon to retire from active service, but he can never cease doing good as long as life lasts.

—Young men and women in Australia stand side by side in universities as in public schools, and co-educationists regard the fact that in no country in the world is there so small a percentage of unmarried women as here, quite conclusive evidence of the wisdom of their theory. Australian girls are said to be remarkably well educated, and in most religious bodies of that country women as well as men are allowed to vote in church affairs.

—The Canadian Presbyterians are considering the matter of a young people's organization within their own denomination. It will be similar to the Baptist union, and, like that organization, will not disturb the interdenominational relations. This seems to be the natural order nowadays; and the time is not far distant when such organizations will be found in every denomination. They will in no wise disturb the Society of Christian Endeavor.—Ensign.

—The will of the late Anthony J. Drexel was probated at Philadelphia. It disposes of an estate generally believed to be worth about $30,000,000. Among other bequests the executors are directed to transfer $1,000,000 to trustees who will apply the income toward the erection of an art gallery, museum or other public institution in the neighborhood of the Drexel institute, provided the latter has not sufficient accommodation for it. So much of the income as can not be judiciously expended for the museum, may be used to maintain a Drexel hospital. The German hospital, of Philadelphia, is to receive $100,000. A codicile provides that part or all of the income of $1,000,000 bequeathed for a museum or hospital may be expended, if the trustees deem it necessary, in support of the Drexel institute.

Africa Journeyings.

There are places in Africa where three men can not be sent on a journey together for fear two of them may combine and sell the third. When a man has determined on a journey he must consult the oracle by means of divination. The methods most commonly employed are as follows: The magician takes a quantity of flour and lets it fall in a steady stream on a flat stone placed at the head of the traveler's bed. If it forms a perfect cone as it falls, the omen is good; if not, there is an end of the matter at that time and by means of the flour cone. Sacrifice must now be offered to propitiate the offended spirits. When the cone is perfect it is covered by an inverted pot and left for the night. In the morning the pot is removed and the cone examined; if it is still whole and in the exact state in which it was left when covered, there is nothing further to be done beyond presenting a thank-offering of rice, flour, or fowl to the ancestral spirits and set out on the journey. Should there be a falling of the cone, even a small slip down its side, it is a sign not to be disregarded, and the oracle, after propitiatory sacrifice, must once more be consulted.—Anthropological Journal.

Recognize the Worthy Qualities.

The secret, not only of harmonious, but of the more helpful social relations, is to recognize the better nature, the higher qualities of each individual to the utmost possible degree, and to ignore, so far as may be, those less worthy traits and qualities. Every character has its proportion of the good and bad; and it is a universal feeling, common to every human being, to feel that they who see our best rather than our worst see most truly. And this consciousness is not a result of egoism, but is simply because it is only the best which, in any permanent sense, is true, and the worst is but transient and temporal. Those teachers and leaders who have been the greatest benefactors to their race are they who have most observed and practiced this truth. — Detroit Free Press.

GENIUS IN A SALESWOMAN.

An Artistic Young Woman Deeply Versed in Flattery.

Said one woman to another: "Why did you buy those shoes? I thought you hated square toes?"

"Well," said the other, "I've been making out to other people that I'd changed my mind about them, and that I bought these shoes because I wanted to, but I'll tell you I bought them because the saleswoman wanted me to. Oh, no, I don't usually do what the saleswoman wants, that's true, but this one had a knowledge of human nature that Shakespeare might have envied.

"Generally I delight in doing what salespeople tell me not to, especially if they do the usual snubbing act and assume to know what I want a great deal better than I do myself. But I was a helpless infant in the hands of this artist. She was a bright, cheery little thing, to begin with, and somehow gave me a vague impression that it was a rare pleasure to wait on such a lovely being as I am." "Then she brought out these shoes, remarking casually that she was so glad she had this one pair of the kind, for she knew they would be high enough in the instep for me, and she feared those in regular stock would not fit me; she explained that they were made to order and were consequently good for two of the ordinary sort.

"'How did it come,' I asked, 'that shoes made to order were for sale?' 'Why, the lady who ordered them insisted on having her measure taken too small, she was so anxious to have little feet, but when she came to try them on she simply couldn't stand up in them; but the shoes were beautiful; just see what perfection they were on me! Just stand up, would I, and walk about in them—what elegance and ease were there.

"'Of course,' she went on, 'you never could wear a cheap shoe. They don't make cheap shoes in those aristocratic lines. Look at some others? Oh, certainly.' And she brought me an armful in the cheerfulest manner.

"But she showed no special interest in their qualities, and by this time I was so charged with respect for her judgment—hadn't she discovered at a glance what beautiful feet I have?—that my decision really hung upon her word. Now she told me how these broad toes make a small foot look smaller, though they are too conspicuous on a big one. She did it all in the simplest, most unconscious way, as if she didn't know how to spell flattery; never heard of such a thing, and I just melted into a pair of shoes such as I never expected to see upon my feet. Of course, the fact is that as an ordered pair thrown back on their hands they were peculiarly unsalable, likely to fit nobody, and high-priced, and this pearl of saleswomen knew they were the ones she most needed to get rid of. So, willy nilly, she made me as wax in her hands and sold them to me. But I flatter myself that there are not three other people in New York who could have done it."—N. Y. Recorder.

SLEEVES GROW SMALLER.

Lace and Chiffon on Every Gown—Ever Present Black Wings.

There are two very prominent fashions at the present moment; one is trimming every dress, be it white, black or colored, of grenadine, silk or cloth, with white lace, and another is the chiffon bodice or front.

On every good dress you will note one or both of these fancies obtaining.

We seem to have arrived at the end of our new ideas for the season, and why not? For perhaps dress was never more charming than just now, when there is once more moderation in our sleeves, and this has been extended itself to our skirts. I am going to continue to prophesy until it actually happens, which I firmly believe will be in a very near future, that the large sleeves will entirely vanish from recognition; already all the coat sleeves have returned to their ordinary proportions, the Brobdingnagian ones only obtaining on the grenadine and crepe dresses, when they fall in such full, soft folds that their width is scarcely in any way offensive.

The newest sleeve for dresses—and this is of course the oldest, and as a matter of fact the one whose popularity invariably follows on that of the leg-of-mutton shape, is in the Garibaldi style, fastening into a narrow band at the wrist.

There is still a fancy prevailing in Paris for a blouse bodice overhanging just below the bust: this has been successfully made with a broad belt of satin at the waist, and is is fitted on an absolutely tight lining with the fullness very, very slight.

Made of accordion plaiting this also looks extremely well, and then again it is sometimes successfully manipulated in a figured foulard, cut juive fashion around the armholes to show the under bodice of a plain material.

A double skirt for the most part accompanies this style of bodice, and on these skirts invariably appears a lace insertion.

Satin ribbon is being used to edge the flounced skirts, the frills of these being made with a very limited amount of material, but even then they are not really becoming.

All the new hats show black wings upon them, either at the back, the front or the sides, and groups of cherries are combined with these with a wonderfully pleasing effect, albeit a most illogical combination.

The sun-burned straw for hats and bonnets is very much in faver, mostly trimmed with white lace, and perhaps an osprey of black on one side and a knot of magenta-tinted velvet.—Gentlewoman, in Boston Globe.

PERSONAL AND LITERARY.

—Queen Victoria has, it seems, a very large hand. She takes a 7½ glove. Her fingers are short and out of proportion to the rest of her hand, and she invariably wears a black glove, which, no matter what the fashion may be, never exceeds a three-button length.

—James Berry, the English ex-executioner, has reached the end of his rope as a lecturer and is anxious to drop back on the other platform. He is appealing to the sheriffs in the United Kingdom to give him "a fresh start in life," he says, by helping others to start out of it.

—Mrs. Mary Anderson Navarro is writing a book of reminiscences of her stage life, and is seeking items about her early appearances from friends in various parts of the world. She is spending the summer in Switzerland and writing leisurely. The book will be looked for with great interest.

—Walter Besant, the novelist, is now fifty-four years of age and has been writing for twenty-five years. He is a fine-looking, portly man, a graduate of Cambridge, where he studied for the church. The fine descriptions of tropical life which appear in some of his early novels were gathered during his residence as a professor at Mauritius.

—Augustus Hemenway, a retired farmer of Canton, Mass., has invited all the public-school teachers of that town, twenty-six in number, to take a ten-days' trip to the World's fair at his expense. He is a former member of the Massachusetts legislature, where he served on the committee of education and is now a member of the Canton school committee.

—"President Lincoln's library consisted of three books, the Bible, 'Pilgrim's Progress' and a copy of 'The Revised Statutes of Indiana,' containing the Declaration of Independence and the constitution of the United States," says an early friend of the great man, "and his education formed on this basis was sufficient to take him to the presidency."

—A correspondent who saw the empress of Austria at a recent reception says that she presented a handsome and striking appearance. "The face, surrounded by ringlets, looked young still, framed as it was in the laces of a broad collar that fell over fashionable puff sleeves. A veil of flowered gauze fell from the tresses that were set up like a tiara on the white brow. The old smile reappeared every moment, and the easy grace for which she was famous in the days when society saw more of her."

—Lord Cromer, the British diplomatic agent at Cairo and the real ruler of Egypt, is a very interesting Englishman. It is his habit to read Homer in the original Greek for half an hour after breakfast every morning, and his afternoons are given up to lawn tennis. At the time of the recent "crisis" in Egyptian affairs he ordered the khedive to dismiss his prime minister within twenty-four hours, sent to Malta and to Aden for troops to support him in case of emergency, and then went out and played tennis until sunset.

—Queen Victoria is not permitted to handle a newspaper or magazine of any kind, nor a letter from any person outside of her immediate family. Every day a secretary cuts from the papers all articles which he thinks would interest her, fastens the clippings to a sheet of silk paper ornamented with gold fringe, and presents it to her majesty. An American lad once sent her a choice collection of the flowers of our country, which she kept for three months and then returned with a kind letter expressing her enjoyment in looking over the specimens and explaining why she could not retain them.

HUMOROUS.

—Minnie—"Did he kiss you when he proposed?" May — "Certainly; I wouldn't consider any but sealed proposals."—Vogue.

—He—"Yes, I dislike her. She called me a big dunce." She—"Absurd! You're not large, are you, Charley?"—N. Y. Ledger.

—"Why do you call your twins 'Circumstances,' Jawkins?" "Because, my dear boy, they are something over which I have no control."—Tit-Bits.

—"My darling," protested De Graf, "my life is an open book." "Yes," sighed his wife, "but much of the print is very bad."—Kate Field's Washington.

—Prisoner—"But I would rather tell my own story. Don't you think it would be believed?" Lawyer—"Yes, that's the trouble. It would carry conviction with it."—Harlem Life.

—Beggar—"Kind gentleman, pray give me a trifle, so that I can buy a morsel of bread." Gent—"Here's a twopence for your bit of bread. Drink my health with it."—Kladeradatsch.

—"You seem to like the colonel, Uncle Mose?" "Yes, sah; he's so gentlemanly, sah!" "Gentlemanly? In what way?" "With his money, sah, with his money."—Buffalo Courier.

—A Conditional Reply.—Mr. Gilley—"Will you share my lot, Miss Gildersleeve?" Miss Gildersleeve—"Build a ten-thousand dollar house on it and then ask me again."—Detroit Fress Press.

—His Last Application.—Housekeeper—"Here is a telegram; your nephew is dead." Property-Owner (with a growl)—"Humph! Now, I guess, he wants money to bury himself with."—Zeitgeist.

—Polite Tramp—"Madam, may I inquire what variety of fowl this is?" Lady of the House—"That is Plymouth Rock." Polite Tramp—"Er—I thought so. Have you any stone crushers on the premises?"—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

—"I say, what do you mark these apple barrels 'open this end' for?" "Should have thought any mutton-head would ha' knowed that. D'ye suppose we can afford to pack big 'uns at both ends of the barrel?"—Drake's Magazine.

—Small Boy—"Mother, may I have something to eat?" Mother—"Certainly, my son." Small Boy—"A biscuit with butter on it." Mother—"No—if you are hungry you can eat it without butter." Little Sister (who has been an attentive listener)—"Mother, I am not hungry, may I have a biscuit with butter on it?"

—Watt—"This talk of American superiority makes me tired. Why only last week a shipload of eight hundred paupers came over here from Europe and still they call this a great country." Potts—"What on earth has that to do with it?" Watts—"Well, you don't ever hear of our American paupers being able to take a trip to Europe do you?"—Indianapolis Journal.

—W. M. Mowatt has the newest sidewalk in town in front of his residence on Third Street.

—On Monday morning people began getting their mail at the new post office first door south of the GEZETTE office.

—John Dahlgren has moved with his family onto the farm of Mrs. H. Cadwell, on the Buffalo road near the Ruckoldt bridge.

--Dr. Walter has a bruised countenance and an arm in a sling. He attributes the whole thing to a Maple Plain dog that scared his horses.

—A novel sight for this part of the country was a sail hoisted and filled by the strong west wind serving as motor for a hand car with several men aboard making good time toward Minneapolis. They didn't seem to tack much.

--The Eagle says concerning a wedding in Minneapolis this week. "Miss Mable Young was the only member of the family present at the ceremony from this place owing to the illness of Mrs. J. D. Young." Some of the boys say they think Dell was there too.

—A petition has been signed by some of our citizens asking the village council to appropriate $100, to aid the band in securing a teacher from Minneapolis. We have nothing against the band but don't believe in making appropriations of public funds for other than public purposes.

—The cash system went into operation among our merchants this morning. At first some friction is felt, but when people get used to it things will, doubtless, move along satisfactorly to all. If merchants buy for cash they can sell for cash considerably cheaper than on the credit system. Produce is taken as cash.

—News comes from the unusually quiet village of Watertown that one of the many threshing crews of the neighborhood had a little thrashing not on the programme. A couple of old hands at the business decided between themselves in a primitive fashion who was the "best man." Boys don't do this unless crowded to it. Be peaceable and not pieceable.

—On Tuesday morning, Dr. J. S. Shrader, Health Officer, was considerably surprised to learn that Mr. Soederstrom and family had left on the morning train for Cambridge, via Minneapolis, leaving the young lady sick with scarlet fever in charge of a nurse. The Health officer at once telegraphed the fact to Dr. Hewitt, Secretary of the State Board of Health.

--Scarlet fever made its appearance in the family of Mr. Soederstrom last week when Health Officer Shrader promptly quarantined the afflicted. It seems to have been brought over from Belle Plaine by Mr. Johnson's family who recently came from there. People can not be too careful concerning the quarantining of such diseases. Every precaution should be observed to keep it from gaining a foothold in the school, or among others. The best way is to keep entirely away from all suspected cases.

—From our exchanges we learn that the country is being overrun with swindlers of various kinds. If a man comes to your place and offers to teach you, for a consideration, how to "make three pounds of butter out of two pounds of milk" don't listen to him. If one schemer comes along and offers for $250, to sell you a patent right on a wagon tongue and in a couple of days another comes along and says he heard you had bought the right and offers you $400 for it don't do as one is said to have done, send your note to party No. 1 where he has carefully left his address for that very purpose, and never hear of either of them again. Look out!

—We understand that Mr. Johnson, the Miller, will soon move his family into Ole Bockman's house, on North Third street.

—Misses Mamie Van Eman and Stella Moody are the latest to take the prevailing disease, and are now whooping-it-up lively.

—There seems to be a sugar famine throughout the cauntry. Some of our people are now using cut loaf, others have retnrned to brown sugar, as of old.

—Messrs. Smith and Batdorf, of Independence, drove through town yesterday with a hay press. From reports of carloads of hay sent to Duluth it will not pay to ship it. The railroad tarriffs are said to have eaten up the whole load and left nothing for the shipper.

—Neighbor Buckley this morning received his mail and laid it on the desk in the lobby of the post office, for a few minutes conversation with the new P. M. When he returned for his mail it was gone, he knew not where.

LATER —The mail was found in the post office.

—It seems as if a city Marshall and two constables ought to be enough to keep order in our town. If those now serving can not, it would be well to try others. They have a right to call on bystanders for help if they need it. We think about one dose of all night in the jail and a respectable fine in the morning would serve to make the young gentlemen who have lately made night hideous with their carryings on, peaceable and quiet citizens for a long time.

The suit for robbery, against McGuire, at Montrose was dismissed by Justice Streeter on Monday for lack of evidence.

Dr. C. H. Kohler, formerly of Maple Lake, now of Glencoe, has been appointed on a board of pension commissioners at that place.

F. W. Rupelius, of Montrose and J. J. Leuzinger, of Waverly have gone to Brandon, Minn., where they will be partners in the mercantile business.

J. A. O'Loughlin is still in jail awaiting the action ot the December term of court. His victim, Mr. Marooney, is said to be improving and may recover.

The Eagle has already made a partial ticket for two years from now as follows:

For Senator—John T. Alley.

For Judge of Probate—W. H. Cutting.

The Scheig boys have not yet had their hearing. The Dr. is out on bail. Carl is in jail and Phil is yet at liberty. The misterious death of A. Smith at Winsted is being agitated again and may cut a figure in the trial.

Rev. Jack Parmeter, formerly of North Rockford, writes us that his address for the next year will be Ferndale, Wash., where he is at work in the ministry. Himself, wife and little Ben are in good health and spirits.

Tanner & Topping again appear at the head of the Waverly Tribune. This might be a pretty strong team if it should "keep in the middle of the road" which it seems inclined to do.

Poor French! If the Journal and Eagle's mud slinging has resulted in no other good than causing him to resolve to have no more such "stuff" in his paper at least something has been accomplished. Poor French!

I. Gutzwiller, Jr., is taking in the World's Fair at Chicago this week. He thinks it inferior to the Centennial, at Philadelphia, and says although he has been there two days he has "not yet found our Minnesota Building."

Montrose had a small fire this week the house of Mr. Stevens caught from a lamp while the children were up stairs in bed and the older folks away. The fire was discovered and extinguished before much damage was done.

Preparations are being made by our Howard Lake friends to have one of the grandest fairs our county has yet seen. Lend a helping hand, each of you, and make Wright county's fair the best in the State. There is no reason why it should not be.

Mr. French appears to have struck a new idea. He sees how it looks himself. The Republican press don't harmonize now nearly so well as when they all had the same editorials about Judge Searls and Deep water ways. Maybe they can all be induced to insert some more ready print reading matter just before next election that will chord better.

The Journal and Eagle should now cry quits on publishing any more doggerel verse. As we published what Eaton said about Gutzwiller we give below what the latter says about Eaton, with the promise that no more such stuff shall disgrace this column.

Eaton, of the Buffalo Journal,
Writes doggerel most infernal,
It smells, its so bad,
And its author—stark mad
Should be consigned to oblivion eternal.

—Wright County Times.

Typhoid fever is getting to almost the epidemic period in town. Mrs. Kennaird's death and several new cases should cause people to find out what kind of water they are drinking and what the sanitary conditions are around them. John Heald, Walter Cheney and a child of J. H. Wager's are very sick with it at Wager's hotel, and Charlie Smith was brought home from Dakota Saturday evening also with the fever.—Howard Lake Herald.

Yes, give us an honest dollar! Let us have intrinsic value money. At the present price of silver a dollar would be about three and one-fourth inches in diameter. But we want an honest penny and nickle, too. There's only seven cents worth of copper in a hundred cents, and only 14 cents worth of material in twenty nickles! On the "honest money plan" pennies should be about six inches in diameter and nickels three and one-half inches.—Cokato Commoner.

The Sherburne County Star-News is awful mad because the Elk River school board refused to buy Free Text books for the school, and says: "There is absolutely no more sense in requiring pupils of our free schools to buy text books than there would be in requiring them to buy the seats they sit upon, or the desks they write at, and people would be laughed at who advocated that." Funds have not yet been raised and placed in the treasury for purchasing text books. Perhaps when that is done the books will be provided, in case the board think best to do so.

From the Litchfield Independent we clip the following which may be of interest to farmers: It is probably useless to advise farmers to hold their wheat who by any means can possibly do it. Farmers should surely strain a point—a dozen points--to hold wheat. The world's wheat crop is short, its price should be high this year, will be higher if American farmers can and will hold wheat out of market. But "holding wheat" don't mean putting it in elevators and paying storage on it. Such wheat is often shipped and sold before the farmer who "has stored it" reaches home. Better keep wheat in well made stacks than in elevators or other store-houses. The only way to "hold wheat" is to keep it on the farm. —Farm Stock and Home.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 13.—A pension attorney whose name or place of residence the pension officials refuse to divulge, has been writing letters to suspend pensioners in this district, advising them to kill President Cleveland, Secretary Hoke Smith, Commissioner Lochren and all others connected with the recent rulings of the department suspending the payment of certain pensions. Pension Agent Skinner has taken the matter up and has forwarded a copy of one of the letters to the interior department at Washington It is probable that the attorney will be arrested for treason. Those who know the man say he is perfectly sane, It is said he is a Grand Army man and and draws a pension through the Pittsburgh agency, but is not a Pittsburger.—Minneapolis Tribune.

MARRIED.

YOUNG, MCALPINE,—On Wednesday, Sept, 13, in Minneapolis, Mr. Dell W. Young and Miss Mamie McAlpine. They are at home at Young's Hotel.

Charlie Moody's Appointment.

Chas. A. Moody has been appointed deputy collector of customs and mounted inspector, with headquarters at the mouth of the Rosseau river, near St. Vincent. He succeeds Chas. A. Pearson. Mr. Moody is a resident of Sauk Rapids and made his debut in state politics as secretary of the ill-starred North Star Democratic club. --Minneapolis Journal.

A GENTLEMAN.

I knew him for a gentleman
By signs that never fail;
His coat was rough and rather worn,
His cheeks were thin and pale—
A lad who had his way to make
With little time to play—
I knew him for a gentleman
By certain signs today.

He met his mother on the street;
Off came his little cap.
My door was shut; he waited there
Until I heard him rap.
He took the bundle from my hand,
And when I dropped my pen
He sprang to pick it up for me,
This gentleman of ten.

He does not push and crowd along;
His voice is gently pitched;
He does not fling his books about
As if he were bewitched,
He stands aside to let you pass;
He always shuts the door;
He runs on errands willingly
To forge and mill and store,

He thinks of you before himself;
He serves you if he can;
For in whatever company
The manners make the man.
At ten or forty 'tis the same,
The manner tells the tale;
And I discern the gentleman
By signs that never fail.

—Margaret E. Sangster, in Harper's Young People.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

TARIFF is a tax and since the people voted to have their burdens lessened by cutting it down, the sooner it is done the better. Keep your promises.

THE late Speaker of Congress, Tom Reed, is having a hard time of it steering the minority through the intricacies of law making at Washington. He don't appear to be so successful as when he wielded the gavel.

THE St. Paul Globe has started a Detective Bureau, independent of the regular city policce force which it claims is, when there are any burgulars around, incompetant irrilvant and immaterial, or about that bad.

THERE ought to be some way by which people could select land other than the race method lately used in the Cherokee Strip. It looks too much like barbarism for a dozen or so of people to be killed or wounded in trying to secure them a home.

GLADSTONE has not yet given up hope of obtainiug home rule for Ireland. Though the House of Lords defeated the measure he had it through the House of Commons he is still in the fight and that to a finish. Such metal makes such men as Gladstone.

THE Retail Grocers and General Dealers of Minnesota are to hold a State convention at Minneapolis at 10 a. m., on Thursday, Sept. 28. Delegates from local organizations and others are invited. Correspondence with A. H. Knight, No. 50, Fifth street south, Minneapolis, is solicited.

IT is a pretty hard remedy, but if officers would discharge their duties as they are said to have done at Roanoke, Va., where they successfully resisted a mob who came prepared to execute lynch law upon a criminal confined in jail we would hear of much less of this burning at the stake and other acts of barbarism by self appointed administrators of justice. It is safer to have good laws and abide by them.

ONE of Minnesota's Congressmen, Tawney, of Winona, is said to have advocated the witholding of the support of the Republican members of the Voorhees repeal bill in revenge for the urging by the administration the repeal of the election law. Each law and each measure of whatever kind should succeed or fail of passage on its merits, and not on account of trades. It seems but for this trading idea there would have been no obnoxious clause of a John Sherman silver bill to trade over now.

IT looks like boys play for the dignified and supposed to be honest and upright men in the law making body of the United States to threaten to vote against measures they have been favoring, and that they believe for the best interest of the whole country unless those of different politics than their own will support their side of questions admitedly of party interest. And yet we hear of Republican Senators threatening to go back on the repeal of the Sherman law unless Democrats will vote to keep up Davenport and his marshalls at the polls.

THE judgeship left vacant by the death of the late Frederick Hooker, has been filled by the appointment of Robert Jamison of Minneapolis, Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, from which office he will at once resign. A Wright county man was mentioned as a possible successor to Judge Hooker, but had no chance. Perhaps Judge Jamison's old shoes on the committee, which will only last until the beginning of the next campaign will be tendered to the Wright county candidate as a kind of salve to heel over the deep wounds caused by the repeated openings on account of the frequent failures of the Wright county man to receive recognition from the powers that be.

ANOTHER instance of the people being too free with the use of their good names turns up in the failure of the Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, of Minneapolis. It transpires that some of the men whose credit is supposed to be gilt-edged allowed the Guaranty Company to use their names in connection with their business. Some are said to have held small interests in the affair, while some claim their names were used without their knowledge. In any case some of them wish now that their names had been somewhere else than on the guaranty circulars. They think now their advertising may cost them more than it would to have hired space in almost any, or in several newspapers. Some of those who were led into doing business with the great institution on account of its good backers, are about, or have already instituted suits to recover from these men whose good names were so freely loaned, or hired, that which they are out by their investments. Men should be careful to endorse only what they know is reliable, and not what they, by a casual glance at a lot of mistifying figures are made to think might be. If they are held responsible as the law should be, they would be careful what they recommended. But a few days since we saw a minister sign a paper which he did not think right but who said others who ought to know had their names there and so loaned his.

From Delano to Cokato.

On Monday we took a trip over the G. N. on the morning passenger to Waverly, passing through the fine farming country between. Farmers were plowing some, though slowly, owing to the dryness of the ground. Many stacks of fine hay were to be seen; some small straw stacks gave evidence of the light wheat crop; while mammoth shocks of corn testified in favor of previous predictions, that corn is good. While we stopped for a moment at Montrose we saw the portly forms of two of the most conspicuous citizens, Capt. John Sibel, late of the 3d Minnesota, and Esq. Mapes, who it is difficult in any crowd to overlook. At Waverly while waiting for an hour for the next train, a freight, we made several visits, very brief ones, but took in all the sights we could notwithstanding the gentle and very welcome rain, which served to lay the dust. Ex-Postmaster Kyte was about the first man we found. W. Walsh, Jack Quinn, several others inquired if we were armed, as their town had been given a rather hard name by a correspondent of the Minneapolis Times. On being informed that we did not carry pistols, we were not further disturbed, but found everybody pleasant, though some were quite indignant about the Times roast. However J. F. McDonel was in Minneapolis and Mr. John Giblin was not at home, Dr. O'Hair wore his customary pleasant smile as he drove through the streets. Hon. J. K. Cullen told us in a very few minutes more about the World's Fair, where he recently spent seven days putting in most of his time at the Catholic and religious congress, than all the balance of the people we have yet heard from, not forgetting the epistle from Ignatius to the Eagle. It would be worth while for any one to hear a lecture by Hon. J. K. on the subject, as they would be interested and instructed in the gentleman's story from ancient Rome to modern Waverly. E. J. Swedeback, of Delano, was putting on the finishing touches to Dave Flannigan's new store room. Editors Tanner & Topping were at home in their new quarters. The city hall was being brick veneered and will add considerably to the metropolitan appearance of the village. Mayor Quinn was busy as usual. The train having arrived we journed on. In passing through Howard Lake we noticed Dr. Chilton watching for patients, and as the train took a rest we ran over to inquire of the chairman of the executive committee, Carl Luhman, about the County Fair. We found Carl nobly defending Democracy against the combined forces of Howard and Victor, also busy doing up goods. He finally found time to say to us that every effort is being made to have the best fair yet. The horse racing he said, would be away ahead of anything ever before seen here; the grounds have been fixed up, a new judges' stand put in place and everything is expected to go off lively. At Smith Lake Joe Ferrell was laying in a stock of fall goods. Five barrels of of sugar were unloaded here which some one remarked ought to sweeten Smith Lake for a long time. J. P. Olson was at his old stand as neat as a bug in a rug. Postmaster Cochran has not yet undertaken to distribute the mails but will soon. The lake was well filled with mud hens. We soon arrived at Cokato, Scandinavian headquarters for our county. After dinner at the Runion House, where Prof. Mooney and another gentleman posted us on the latest horse races in the state and where a couple of school mams discussed the subject of sending the scholars who do not bring some new books, which quite likely they cannot buy in town, home, a thing which we think against the peace and dignity of the state of Minnesota and the statutes thereon. We enjoyed a visit with Hon. H. C. Bull, who thinks the post offices are being parcelled out rather slowly and not always to the best advantage. Populist Sexton and Editor Roll, Capt Bull, Hon. Holmstrom and ye scribe took part in a rather animated discussion on the silver question. No converts seemed to be made however, and it appeared to be a draw game. Having been informed that a report was current that only two democrats remained in the village, Editor Roll kindly consented to assist us in looking up the matter. We found Dr. Cassel in his office amid books, operating chairs, and, we presume, the finest microscope in the county. He at once denied that he was anything but a democrat. He being the heaviest individual cell in the Democratic system we began to think something was left. O. J. Mobust was found at his store. He indignantly denied the rumor and claimed to be true blue as ever. John Tracy was probably out gunning for ducks, as he loves that sport and game is plenty now, but we were given to understand that John is still a democrat, and that there are many more in the village and vicinity besides Capt. Bull.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 15, 1893.

It seems difficult for the republicans to understand that the democrats in Congress intend to redeem the promises made in the Chicago platform. They actually seemed to think that it was possible to cajole the democrats into letting the McKinley tariff law, which was denounced from every democratic stump and in the columns of every democratic newspaper in the land during the last campaign, remain on the statute books, for awhile anyway. And their mistake in the tariff business, which is now very plain to them, taught them nothing. They are now engaged in the useless business of trying to frighten the democrats out the notion of repealing the Federal election laws, laws which made the notorious John I. Davenport a possibility and which in the hands of the unscrupulous administration have in the past (and may in the future, if allowed to stand) surrounded the voting places of American citizens with bayonets in the hands of soldiers.

The number of democrats who can be frightened by republican twaddle is small, and as Representative McMillin said early in the session, "let those democrats who feel timid about carrying out the Chicago platform go to the rear; there will be enough left in front to do the fighting." The Tucker bill for the repeal of all laws providing for Federal supervision of elections has been reported to the House and will be given the right of way until passed. How long it will take to pass it depends largely upon circumstances. The democrats are perfectly willing that it shall be fully debated, and no attempt will be made to force a vote until legitimate debate has been exhausted, but no fillibustering will be allowed.

Everything indicates that the debate on the Voorhees repeal bill is drawing near its end in the Senate and that the long contest of personal endurance by means of continuous session of the Senate with a quorum always present or within call will soon begin. Another attempt, in fact, several of them, were made this week to get President Cleveland's consent to some sort of compromise that would secure an immediate vote and avoid the hard feelings between Senators which always follow prolonged sessions, but Mr. Cleveland was inflexible. A number of the democratic Senators who will vote for the Voorhees bill are personally willing to agree to a compromise that would in some shape recognize silver, but having promised Mr. Cleveland that they would vote for unconditional repeal they do not feel at liberty to do so without his consent.

The House committee on foreign affairs will report a bill providing a substitute for the much-discussed Geary anti-Chinese law. The bill introduced by Representative Everett, of Massachusetts, is now being considered by the committee and will probably be favorably reported, with slight modifications suggested by Representative Geary, of California. So many sensational statements have recently been made concerning the intentions of the administration that Attorney General Olney gave out an official statement this week that the Geary law would not be enforced until Congress acts, and that the Government does not acquiesce in the interpertation given the law by Judge Ross in his recent decision, as to the right of private citizens to begin proceedings against the Chinese and call upon the government to provide for their deportation.

No one can tell at the White House without becoming aware of the satisfaction that is felt from the President down to the humblest employe over the good fortune that has followed Mrs. Cleveland and her baby girl. Congratulations are still pouring in by mail from all sections of the country and from all classes of people.

Jerry Simpson's refusal to engage in a joint debate with Congressman Marshall ("Cyclone Jim"), of Virginia, when they were both speaking at the same Virginia town the other day, has been the cause of Jerry's getting a lot of chaffing from his colleagues in the House. Jerry comes from a cyclone country and he knows the danger to be expected from them, and wisely declines to knowingly put himself in the path of one.

The tariff headings before the House Ways and Means committee have at times been quite interesting this week, and several manufacturers' agents found themselves confounded when they presented the stock protection arguments went away thoroughly convinced that the democrats on that committee are much better posted on the practical workings of the present tariff than the newspapers generally have given them credit for being. Tom Reed continues to play the role of clown.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Everybody is wishing for better times. Stock and farm produce is about down to the bottom notch. Wheat comes up a cent today and drops two cents tomorrow, all on account of a democratic administration. While our Congressmen are fixing up our monetary system and having a good time lunching on Limberger cheese, their constitutents are patiently waiting for the millionare to come, but it seems they would prefer we should take the medicine in small doses. Have heard a goodeal about confidence being restored to the people but how long must we wait. The Boards of Trade, Chambers of Commerse, bankers and shylocks of the country have shuffled those hard times upon us so they might get a little more revenue for themselves. But some of them will hardly be able to take their own medicine, but if they can only fool the people then they are all right and they most always succeed in doing it. Rome coined silver into money agout 250 years before the Christian era and gold about 50 years later. Silver was the standard money for England until early in the last century, and was full legal tender until 1816 and yet silver is no good for money any more. What we want is enough of it. It has been only of late years that there has been more silver produced in this country than gold. Only since 1874 has the production of silver exceeded that of gold, and now the cry is continually, we are getting too much silver. But while congress is resting over the repeal of the Sherman purchasing clause, it might be well to reduce some of the import duties. This monstrosity or McKinley blood sucker tariff that became a law Oct. 1, 1890, is filching the poor out of a good many dollars. Only notice the import duties on cotten goods that the poor people cousume, the duty is higher on them than on silks or fine broad cloath, and yet the tariff is for the benefit of the poor.

AWFUL DISASTER.

Two Sections of a "Big Four" Passenger Train Collide Near Kankakee, Ill.—Seven Persons Killed and Many Injured.

MANTENO, Ill., Sept. 21.—The second section of the Big Four express, No. 45, south bound, crashed into the rear end of the first section at 9:20 o'clock Monday night. Seven persons were killed and twenty severely injured and it is probable that many bodies are buried under the wreck. The disaster occurred near this place. The engine of the second section ran clear through one sleeper and two coaches. Not all of the bodies, it is thought, are yet recovered, as the wreckage is piled about the tracks in such a manner that the small wrecking force has not been able to make much impression on the mass.

In the confusion it has been impossible to secure the names of but two of the dead. These are Chris Kimmel, of Dayton, O., and David Jackson, of Cynthiana, O. The injured so far as known are:

Albert Jay Sholter, Ripley, O., bad cut face and head, probably fatal; George Brackney, Wilmington, O., limbs crushed, probably fatal; C. B. Wisehart, Frankfort, O., internal injury; William Evans, Powellton, W. Va., internal injury; Miss Sallie Evans, Powellton, W. Va., internal injury; Mrs. Chris Kimmel, Dayton, O., head and body injured; L. H. Blonton, Cincinnati, fatal; James W. Brown, Wilmington, O., internal and head; Mrs. James W. Brown, Wilmington, O., internal injury; Olive Patton, Carmel, O., body bruised; Emily Templen, Sinking Springs, O., head and body; J. W. Means, Chester, S. C., slightly injured back and head; Blanche Belleson, Sinking Springs, O., limbs badly bruised; Anna Cowells, Lower Albany, Ind.; Jessie Morse, Cincinnati, badly injured internally; Emma Gallatin, Columbus, O., back and limbs bruised; Miss E. Gallatin, Columbus, O., limbs bruised; Miss Libbie Jackson, Cynthiana, O., internal and other injuries, probably fatal; J. W. Foster, Springfield, O., scalp wound and eye gouged; Mrs. J. W. Foster, ribs broken, internal and probably fatal.

The first section of the train carried one Ohio & Mississippi sleeper for Louisville, Ky., one Ohio & Mississippi chair car for Greensburg, Ind., five day coaches and baggage and express cars. It had run down the road to a point two and one-half or three miles south of Manteno when a local train which was preceding it at some distance slowed up and the flagman on the local was sent back up the track to intercept the on-coming first section of train No. 45 from Chicago. The engineer on the first section obeyed the signal and at once drew his train to a standstill. The flagman of the first section of the through train in turn started to the rear, but the second section of the train was following along so near that he had gone but a few yards when around a sharp curve in the track the headlight of the following train appeared. The first section was now at a standstill and the locomotive pulling the second section had not in the least lessened its full speed of 35 miles an hour. The curve in the track, behind which the train on ahead was not visible, was much too near the doomed coaches to allow the engineer of the approaching train to diminish his speed noticeably.

The frantic flagman, seeing the train coming on with a great rush and hissing of steam and trembling, jumped down the steep embankment just in time to save himself from death. The engineer, upon observing the danger as his locomotive rounded the curve reversed his engine, seeing the hopelessness of any attempt to check the speed of his train in so short a distance, and realizing the danger, he jumped from his cab down the embankment, and his fireman followed him.

The crash came then, and the locomotive drove ahead with mighty force into the heavy sleeping car, smashing the framework of its rear end into kindling wood. The sleeping car was in turn driven into the day coach next forward, which gave way more completely, its timbers being lighter. This coach and the coach just forward of it were almost completely demolished. All of the three cars were crowded with people, more than half of those in the sleeper having retired for the night. The passengers were thrown from their berths and from their seats. Some were crushed under beams and between the broken, grinding timbers of the wrecked cars. Awful confusion and fright prevailed.

People from farmhouses in the vicinity heard the crash when the collision occurred. Twenty men were on the scene within half an hour and began helping uninjured passengers and trainmen in the work of rescue. One brawny fellow, whose hat had blown off and who hadn't stopped to put on his coat, was the first to arrive. He lived near the right of way. He saw the passengers rushing out of the cars. With an ax he broke open several windows in the sleeper.

He crawled in at one over a berth and found a man lying dead between the blankets. He pulled the body out. The upper berth was broken in the middle and a part of it apparently had struck the unfortunate in the chest. Having got this body out of his way the farmer, followed by passengers from other cars, crawled into the sleeper. Several women and children, who seemed to have been rendered unconscious by the shock, had partly recovered their wits and were crying piteously. The men were hunting for a way out. The passengers were helped out of the windows that had been broken and were told to remain together and be as brave as they could until doctors, who, the train people assured them would soon arrive from Kankakee, came. All of these persons were hurt severely. They could not join in the rescue work. One woman staggered about for a moment and fell to the ground. A little girl fell sobbing on her prostrate form. Having got the living out of the death-trap the rescuers went back and brought out four ghastly bodies, two of them women. The two coaches that were crushed presented an awful sight to the rescuers. They carried or helped out sixty people, two of whom were stone dead.

A Forger Captured.

CHICAGO, Sept. 20.—E. S. Simpson is locked up at the central station charged with wholesale forgeries upon the People's bank of Chestnut street, Philadelphia. By means of forged checks he is said to have victimized the Illinois trust and savings bank for $225, and was arrested there Monday morning while he was attempting to cash a check for $3,200. When detectives Corbus and Flaherty searched his rooms at the Palmer house a fraudulent certification stamp of the People's bank and a quantity of the blank checks of that institution were found.

M. B. Scanlan, a Boston commercial traveler, was drugged, perhaps fatally assaulted and robbed of $200 by crooks at Niagara Falls.

CONFESSED.

Fireman La Liberty Tells the Story of the Mineral Range Train Robbery—Most of the Gang Captured and Part of the Stolen Money Recovered.

CALUMET, Mich., Sept. 20.—George La Liberty, a locomotive fireman lately discharged from the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic railway, has been arrested, supposed to be the man who handled the throttle on Engineer Shuler's engine at the time of the train robbery Friday. He is said to have made a confession implicating King and his companions, and also Express Messenger Hogan. La Liberty told the officers that the money was contained in a trunk which he shipped from Houghton to Marquette Saturday morning. The trunk was found by the officers, but the money was not there. The officers now feel that they have the right men and made no mistake in holding King and his companions. D. W. Hogan, the express messenger, was arrested at 1 o'clock Sunday night at his boarding house in this city.

La Liberty's confession shows that he covered the engineer and fireman while the others looted the train. King smashed the express car door with a sledgehammer; Chellow and Butler rifled the safe and the rest carried away the plunder. He implicated Express Messenger D. W. Hogan, of the Mineral Range train, which was robbed, whose arrest followed at Hancock.

Then followed a detailed account of where the trunk was left along the line of the Mineral Range road, and a special train and some officers were sent after it. They found the trunk, and on its arrival at the Houghton national bank it was opened and found empty. On La Liberty's information $14,000 was recovered by the officers, it is claimed. The empty condition of the trunk is accounted for by the suggestion that the money was stolen a second time from the robbers themselves.

The men now under arrest are:

A. S. Cannon, of Hancock, a young man of good family, whose trunk was used to carry away the money; John Ling, an athlete; Chellew, a saloonkeeper, of Negaunee; Michael and John Shea, saloonists here; Tom Winters, baggageman; Moses Lojgtin, brakeman on the train robbed; D. W. Hogan, the messenger on the robbed car; Ed Hogan, saloonist; W. Shoup, hack driver, and a man named Butler, an habitue of Chellew's place.

AN AMERICAN DOLLAR.

A Proposition Offered in the Senate by Senator Stewart of Nevada.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20.—At the opening of the senate Senator Stewart (rep., Nev.) submitted an amendment to the silver repeal bill, authorizing the president to invite the governments of the republics of Mexico, Central and South America, Hayti and San Domingo to join the United States in a conference to be held in Washington within four months from the passage of the act to secure the adoption of a common silver coin (which shall be a dollar of not more than 383.13 grains, nor less than 359.91 grains of pure silver) to be issued by each government, to be a legal tender in all commercial transactions between the citizens of all the American states. The amendment proposes an innovation as to the character of the conference in that it provides that the action of delegates shall be binding upon the government which sent them. When the common coin is agreed upon each government represented at the conference shall open its mints to unlimited coinage for the benefit of depositors of silver bullion.

FOREST FIRES STILL RAGING.

Ashland Overhung by a Cloud of Smoke—Valuable Timber Burned.

ASHLAND, Wis., Sept. 20.—The city is overhung by a heavy pall of smoke, and a bad forest fire is burning south of the city along the line of the Wisconsin Central road, within a mile of town. Fires are also raging in the direction of Bayfield. On the Odana reservation and in the White river district, according to the reports of land hunters who have explored the skirts of the burned district, several settlers have been burned out, although all efforts to obtain the names of the persons whose homes have been destroyed have proved fruitless. The destruction of the pine on the reservation, however, has been enormous, and Capt. Day, one of the pine-land hunters who has viewed the burning forest, estimates that no less than 75,000,000 feet of pine on the reservation were burned, causing a loss to the government of at least $630,000.

FOR PAID-UP PENSIONS.

Plan of Congressman Hudson to Settle Claims of Pensioners in Full.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 20.—A bill proposing the settlement and payment in full of pensions growing out of the late war of the rebellion has been introduced in the house by Representative Hudson (Kan.). It provides that any pensioner may, surrender his certificate and receive in full payment of all claims against the government on account thereof, ten times the annual payment thereon. This act shall not apply to the obligations of the government toward minor children of deceased soldiers now on the pension rolls. Widows and minor children of pensioners who shall surrender their certificates under this act shall not be entitled to receive any other pension.

A Fisheries Congress.

CHICAGO, Sept. 20.—An international congress of people interested in fisheries and fish culture will be held here beginning October 16. This includes the study of every form of life in the waters of the globe that is or has been the object of industry. There are five general sections or divisions—fishery laws and administration, the science in relation to fisheries and fish culture, methods of capture and distribution, fish culture, the world's fisheries. Each section has its own presiding officer.

Death of a Pioneer.

RACINE, Wis., Sept. 20.—Horatio G. Winslow, a pioneer resident of Wisconsin, died at his home in this city at 8 a. m. of pneumonia, aged 73 years. He is the father of Justice John B. Winslow, of the supreme court of Wisconsin, and up to within a year ago had been one of the foremost men in the state in educational matters.

Still Firing on Rio.

PARIS, Sept. 20.—A dispatch received from Rio Janeiro by the Brazilian legation here says the insurgent fleet resumed the bombardment of the city Monday at noon. Heavy firing was continued for several hours. No details of the bombardment have been received here from any source.

MINNESOTA NEWS.

The Minneapolis Exposition.

The Minneapolis exposition is now in splendid running order and is receiving the attention from visitors which the excellence of the display merits. There are a number of special features of a varied nature and adapted to the tastes of all classes of visitors. One of the most popular of these is the performing lion display of Col. E. Daniel Boone. The lions perform many wonderful tricks in a large steel cage, in full view of the audience. The small auditorium, in which this display takes place, is crowded five times a day. The gallery of Northwestern art is attracting a great many visitors, and the fish exhibit is thronged from morning till night. The art display was said, by such men as Wyman Elliott and A. A. Brackett, of Minneapolis, to be the finest ever made in the state.

The American band and orchestra, which gives four concerts every day, is pronounced by professional musicians to be the best band ever heard at the Minneapolis exposition. It is noticeable that there is an unusually large attendance at the exposition from the country.

Prize Winners.

The parade of N. P. Clarke's prize horses was one of the most enthusiastic events in St. Cloud's history. The streets were thronged with citizens, and Mr. Clarge, as his carriage passed, was greeted with continuous outbursts of applause. The parade was headed by marshals, followed by a band, police, council, county commissioners, fire department and 21 prize winning Clydesdales, with Sir Patrick, winner of the world's sweepstakes, at the head, and Lily McGregor, the world's prize mare, heading the mares. At the park, Hon. P. B. Gorman made a short address, showing the appreciation of Mr. Clarke's efforts by citizens and neighbors and the pride felt in St. Cloud at his success.

Honor to St. Paul.

St. Paul is to have an ocean liner named in her honor. One of the quartet of vessels of the American line will be called St. Paul and another St. Louis. By an act of congress the ocean racers, City of New York and City of Paris, were admitted to the American registry upon the agreement of the owners to build two ships in America of equal tonnage and speed. These two ships are now on the ways at Cramp's yard in Philadelphia, and when launched will be christened after the saintly cities on the Mississippi. Both will be the equals, if not superiors, of the New York and Paris.

Prize Winners.

Henry F. Brown's herd of Shorthorn cattle, which took the first premium at the world's fair, was shipped to Lincoln, Neb., for exhibition. From there it will go to St. Joe and Kansas City, returning to Minneapolis for a week in October at the Exposition. Mr. Brown has just cause to be proud of his herd, which took such a high place at the world's fair, for out of 230 cattle on exhibition only five breeders' herds, of 10 each, were considered fit competitors for the premiums.

Severe Loss.

Canby was visited by a disastrous fire which completely destroyed 20 business houses and six residences and a score of barns. While filling a lighted lamp with kerosene the oil in the can became ignited, causing an explosion which set fire to the butcher shop of Adland & Landru. The postoffice was burned, but the records and stamps were saved. Total loss about $200,000. There is only one business house left standing.

For Life.

Otto Londen, who has been on trial at Mora for the murder of Lars O. Larson, committed on Aug. 13, 1893, was convicted of murder in the first degree and sentenced by the court to imprisonment for life. When being brought up for sentence to be pronounced, he broke away from the sheriff and ran nearly a quarter of a mile before he was recaptured.

He Bet on Horses.

Daniel J. Collins, station agent for the Chicago Great Western railroad at Kenyon, charged with embezzling the company's funds to the amount of about $1,300, had a hearing in the justice court at Red Wing and was committed to jail to await the grand jury. The young man says he bet on horse races in St. Paul and lost, and was thus led to take the money.

News in Brief.

The enrollment of the St. Paul schools shows an attendance of 15,343

John Russell, a farmer living near Pokegama, has mysteriously disappeared. It is feared by his wife that Indians or others have killed him.

Alex. McKillop got a verdict of $7,500 against the Duluth street car company. In a former trial he got $2,000, but the case was sent back from the supreme court because the lower court would not admit evidence that McKillop was drunk at the time of the accident. An interesting phase of the retrial was the expert testimony upon the question whether eating peanuts would disguise a whisky breath.

Carl and Elmer Scheig must answer in court for not returning to the Bank of Minneapolis the $3,400 which their absconding brother left in their care. When the case against Carl Scheig and his brother was dismissed in the municipal court, the two were immediately taken to the court house for arraignment on indictments found by the grand jury.

Myrtle Graham, wife of Thos. Graham, editor of the Cloquet Pine Knot, shot herself with a revolver at Thompson. The ball passed through her left breast, lung and shoulder. Her injuries are fatal and no cause is known for the deed.

ALL ABOUT THE HAIR.

"Don't Wash It," Is the Advice of an Experienced Hair Dresser.

Constant brushing of the hair has much to do with making it soft and glossy as well as keeping the scalp clean by an occasional washing with pure soap and soft water or the white of an egg. One of the best hair tonics is made from rum and quinine. The object of brushing the hair is not only to stimulate the scalp and keep it free from dandruff, but to keep it free from every particle of dust its entire length. For the latter purpose a brush with closely set bristles is necessary.

"Don't wash your hair." This is advice given by a woman who has been at the head of a leading hair dressing establishment for the last twelve years. She says further:

"I believe the average young woman drowns the life of her hair by frequent washing in hot and cold water. We send out about twenty-nine young women who dress hair by the season, contracting for the entire family. They plan to give each head a combing twice a week, and, by special arrangement, make house-to-house visits daily. Not a drop of water is put on the hair, and every head is kept in a clean and healthy condition. We pin our faith to a good brush, and prefer a short-bristled, narrow brush, backed with olive or palm wood. We use the brush, not only on the hair, but on the scalp as well.

"A maid has to be taught how to dress and care for the hair by object lessons. The instruction is part of my duty. In teaching one novice I operate on the other. The first thing to do when the hair is unpinned is to loosen it by lightly tossing it about. The operation need not tangle it, and as the tresses are being aired they fall into natural lengths. Instead of beginning at the scalp, the first combing should start at the end of the hair. In other words, comb upward in order to avoid tangling, breaking and tearing the hair out. This racking of the hair will remove the dust. After this the scalp should be brushed thoroughly. By this I mean that a full hour should be spent, first brushing the hair, and then the head.

"One of the finest heads of hair I know belongs to a young girl who makes it a point to occasionally comb out her long tresses, lying her head on the sill of an open window, let her hair float outside, blown by all the winds of heaven and kissed by the sunshine. This seems an idle proceeding, but it is far from being time wasted, since the hair is thoroughly ventilated and cleaned sufficiently to render necessary washing more infrequently."

THAT HAT.

I won her "Yes!" I kissed her lips,
I searched her eyes with thoughts elate;
Her deep blue eyes were fraught with doubt,
How could my darling hesitate?
I coaxed the cause of trouble forth:
She murmured: "Is my hat on straight?"

Weeks flew, she was my wedded wife;
The carriage stood beside the gate
To bear us to our dear new home,
My joy was quite intemperate.
I whispered low: "My love, my own!"
As forth we fared in bridal state,
With eyelashes all wet with tears
She answered: "Is my hat on straight?"

Reverses dimmed those early years.
My downfall was precipitate;
I gently broke the news to her,
My angel wife and loving mate,
Our little all was at the dogs
And we should have to emigrate.
She trustfully made answer brave,
With confidence for any fate:
"You'll make another fortune, dear,
But tell me, is my hat on straight?"

She snatched our baby from its death
Upon an engine's path irate;
She spoke a speech with much applause
Upon the day we celebrate;
She single-handed warned and fired
A serving man intoxicate.
But after every feat supreme,
When I my pride would intimate,
My heroine would always say:
"How nice! But is my hat on straight?"

O woman! Dear to God and man,
What ails your graceful little pate?
Why is that sweet, delightful hat
So difficult to navigate?
Knowledge of good and evil you,
Ere you were summoned to vacate,
Snatched at in Eden and secured
With penalties commensurate.
But will you never, never know,
From now till beauty's doom and date,
Past peradventure of a doubt,
Whether you have your hat on straight?

SHE LOVED AN ARTIST.

And Married Him Despite Her Mother's Plans.

Mrs. Carnegie's last words had been: "For Heaven's sake, Letitia, don't let it be late again to-day!".

It was luncheon, and luncheon to men who have spent the morning on the moors is important. At 12:15, therefore, just fifteen minutes before it was necessary to start, the wagonette was, by Mrs. Carnegie's orders, at the door, the baskets put in, and Mrs. Carnegie in the breakfast room, worrying her sister, Mrs. Mainwaring, by assurances that the girls would make them late, as usual.

"Dollie was ready half an hour ago," said Mrs. Mainwaring. "I saw her in the hall."

"Dollie is not going with us. Don't distress yourself about Dollie; she is quite happy."

"How does she make herself so?"

"Oh, I don't know. We are going to be so late! She sketches,—she does all kinds of things. I don't think she milks the cows, but she certainly feeds the chickens."

"You ought to know a great deal more about her than you do. There is such a thing as getting tired of gardening and feeding the chickens."

"Yes, I know, but that hasn't happened to Dollie yet, and you see going out is so much more important to the other girls. Just think, Evie is twenty-six and Agnes only a year younger."

"But Dollie is twenty-one."

"My dear, you worry me. I must do my duty to the two eldest—but I wish they would come."

"And while you are marrying them Dollie will marry herself, and probably not to your liking. In a fairy tale she would fall in love with the gardener, who would, of course, be the king's son in the ample and effectual disguise of a shabby coat and cap."

"Oh, Cecelia! Dollie is not a girl of that kind. She is as good as gold, and perfectly bidable, and she shall go everywhere when Evie gets engaged. Has it struck you that Sir Philip is in love with Evie? I am almost certain that he is, and I am delighted. Oh, here the girls come. How charming they both look!"

"And what have you been doing this afternoon, Dollie?" asked Mrs. Mainwaring at tea time.

Dollie blushed (her aunt thought because it was so unusual for anyone to take any interest in her employments), and said: "Sketching in the glen, aunt."

"And you had a dull little luncheon all alone by yourself in that great dining-room?"

"No, I was working so hard that I could not spare time to come in. I ate all the bread I had taken with me to rub out with. I wish you would come to the glen, aunt; it is so pretty."

"Dear child, I am much too old to scramble. May I see your sketch?"

Dollie brought it. Her mother looked at it, too, and was startled at its merit.

"Why, Dollie!" she exclaimed, "you have improved wonderfully! That bit in the left-hand corner is excellent."

Again Dollie colored. "I had some help there, mother," she said, "an artist who comes to the glen sometimes—"

"An artist, Dollie! What do you mean?"

"I mean a gentleman, mother. He strayed in by accident three weeks ago, when I was there painting. He has often been to work there since, and whenever he comes he gives me really beautiful hints. He has taught me—"

Here her mother's attention was distracted by a servant with a message, and Mrs. Mainwaring finished Dollie's sentence for her. "To color, my dear. Yes, I see that he has taught you to do that!" She was not, however, looking at the sketch, but at her niece's rosy cheeks.

"Take care that he is not teaching her how to fall in love," said Mrs. Mainwaring.

"I will—I really will. Just now it is hard to attend to anything but Evie and Sir Philip, but when the business is settled Dollie shall always be with me. Did you see how he watched Evie at luncheon?"

"No, I thought he was rather vexed or disappointed about something."

"I hope not. Evie may perhaps have been making some of her stupid speeches. But he loves her, I am sure. I am so happy about it that I am not able to think of anything else."

From Dollie she learned that the landscape painter's name was Fleming, that he was young, good-looking and clever, lived in Edinburgh, was quite a gentleman and not at all the kind of man that Aunt Cecelia seemed to imagine.

Being informed that Dollie had been forbidden to go there, Mrs. Mainwaring advised her sister to assure herself that Dollie had understood and was obeying this order. This, Mrs. Carnegie did, and then once more gave her whole mind to Sir Philip and Evie. Why did he not propose? The day of his departure was drawing very near.

It came two days earlier than had been anticipated. A rich old bachelor, uncle of Sir Philip, who was then in Sunderlandshire, dispatched this telegram to him:

"Am ill and must have rest. Come at once and help me or I shall die outright. Why are you so long in arriving?"

Ten minutes after the telegram came Sir Philip followed Mr. Carnegie to the study—a study in which no book was ever opened but that which he had gone to fetch—Bradshaw. Mrs. Carnegie thought she knew what Sir Philip had gone to do and tried to be patient while she awaited the result.

In a quarter of an hour her husband came and said: "My dear, I have had a great surprise—a very great surprise—it almost amounted to a shock."

"What nonsense, Charles! You must have known what was coming."

"Why should I? You didn't."

"Indeed, I did. I have known for ten days that Sir Philip wanted to marry Evie."

"But he doesn't—it is Dollie."

Even if Sir Philip did happen to be in love with the young daughter he was still Sir Philip; so after Mrs. Carnegie was sufficiently recovered to fit a new heroine into the romance in which she was so much interested she sent out emissaries in search of Dollie.

No one could find her, until at last an under-gardener, being much pressed by Mrs. Carnegie herself, said, with evident reluctance, that Miss Dollie might perhaps, he thought, be painting in Ladywell wood.

To reach this wood a cornfield had to be traversed, and just as Mrs. Carnegie was half across it she saw Dollie in the distance, bidding farewell to a gentleman with a sketching bag on his back. The unhappy lady stopped short in horror.

"Dollie," she exclaimed, "this is shameful! I have been trusting you all this time, and you, it seems, have been breaking your word?"

"Oh, no, I have not! I have not been near the glen, and I have never seen Mr. Fleming until this morning. Don't look that way, mother; I am speaking the truth. I was on my way to tell you all about it."

"Tell me nothing of that kind! I want to know nothing."

"But you must know, mother—you will be forced to know. Mr. Fleming has asked me to marry him and I have said I will."

"You have! Well, girls do stupid things sometimes, but the sooner you undo this the better!"

"Mother," Dollie began, but her voice failed her.

"Make no appeal to me, Dollie. I am sorry for you, of course, if you care; but you won't care long. Be a good girl and do your best to dismiss this from your mind at once and forever, and go to your room now and write and tell that man that you intend to do so."

"Where is Dollie?" asked Mr. Carnegie when he and Sir Philip came.

"She was here a few minutes ago, but she has been sketching in the sun and it has been too much for her. She had to go to bed with a frightfully bad headache."

"Then I shall not see her unless I stay till to-morrow," said Sir Philip; after expressing much sympathy.

"Oh, you must not do that—you must not offend your uncle; besides Dollie may not be well enough to see you to-morrow."

Sir Philip departed and Mr. and Mrs. Carnegie repaired to the study to write to Mr. Fleming.

Their daughter, they said, might have been temporarily led away by persuasion, but now saw, as anyone with any judgment must see, that a marriage with him was out of the question. They inclosed a letter from her which would inform him of the true state of her feelings, and trusted that he would see the propriety of leaving the neighborhood at once.

"But can you get her to write that letter?" asked Mr. Carnegie.

"Oh, yes," replied his wife, and went to Dollie's room, which she did not leave until she had succeeded.

He wrote to her, but his letter was returned by Mr. Carnegie unopened.

Fleming became desperate, and, being powerless in other ways, called the wisdom of the serpent to his aid and wrote: "I find it so hard to believe that your daughter's mind can have changed so suddenly that I entreat you to let me see her alone for ten minutes. If you permit this, and then she speaks as she has written, I give you my word of honor as a gentleman to accept her decision as final and to leave this place at once."

With great reluctance Mr. Carnegie replied: "Since you refuse to believe the truth and insist on giving my daughter this pain, you may come to-morrow at twelve, when she herself will tell you what her wish is. You may see her for ten minutes, but her family will be present."

All eyes were fixed on Dollie as she came in, looking pale, ill and scarcely able to stand. No one spoke—all waited to hear the words that were about to be said. How would that faltering, frightened girl get through her set speech?

"Charles!" whispered Mrs. Carnegie, "we have been fools to let him see her! Who—"

"Do be quiet, my love," said Mr. Carnegie. "It can't be helped now." But he was sitting, watch in hand, longing as much as she did for the ten minutes to come to an end. Fleming was talking so seriously and Dollie listening so intently.

"Time is up!" Mr. Carnegie exclaimed, almost joyously, as he put his watch in his pocket. Then he half crossed the room and said: "Dollie, have you told this gentleman by word of mouth what he refused to believe when you wrote it?"

"She has told me all I want to know," said Fleming. "Thank you sincerely for allowing me to see her. Thank you also for insisting on being in the room with us, for I have something to say which requires the presence of witnesses. Before those here assembled, I declare this woman to be my wife. Now, Dollie, speak!"

And before any of the unwilling witnesses had recovered from the shock of hearing those words, Dollie had faltered forth: "I declare this man to be my husband."

"What does this mean?" cried Mr. Carnegie, who knew something of Scotch law.

"It means that we are married. Don't be anxious about your daughter's future. I am not a lord of Burleigh, but her home will be one in which we can receive you if you will come."—London Black and White.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—By contact with this planet meteorites are raised to a temperature which reaches from 3,000,000 to 4,000,000 degrees—high enough to consume the hardest known substance almost instantly. Thus only those of large size reach the earth before being entirely burnt up.

—A constant and large increase is noted in the output of the oil wells of the Caspian region. About 3,000 tons are exported every working day of the year from Batoum alone, and the exports of last year were 63,633 tons in excess of those of the previous year.

—Two wave motor pumps have been in operation some time out near the Cliff house, not far from San Francisco, that have raised 1,000,000 gallons per day into a reservoir at an elevation of 100 feet. The Pacific Lumberman says: "This appears to be the best result that we know as having been obtained from the various wave motors that have been tried during the past six or seven years."

—Winged ants always fly in companies, sometimes very numerous. When Col. Augustus Frazier, on October 6, 1813, was watching the battle of the Pyrenees from the mountain called Pena de Aya he and his officers were suddenly surrounded by such a cloud of ants that their view of the battle was cut off and they were compelled to seek another station.

—The reimposition of the Mexican duty on corn, and the satisfactory crop in Mexico, which is the cause of it, means a good deal to Kansas and Texas and Missouri which have been doing a good business feeding the republic south of us. The corn exports from this country to Mexico, without meal, were as follows, in bushels: 1893, 961,458; 1891, 615,332; 1892, 754,548; 1893 (eleven months), 6,544,166.—N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

—Coal first came into use in England in 1234. During the last ten years there were produced 11,086,000,000 tons, and coal fields have been discovered in every country in the world. It is estimated that the coal fields now known will supply the constantly increasing demand for 1,000 years, which will give the world time to look round and either discover more or find a proper substitute.

—The state farm at Roanoke, N. C., employs more than 800 convicts, who have under cultivation about 6,000 acres. There will be an enormous crop this season. The cornfield contains about 2,000 acres, and will yield about 100,000 bushels; the cotton crop will be about 1,000 bales. More than 3,000 bushels of wheat have been harvested, and the pea crop will amount to about 10,000 bushels.

—Dr. Bowdler Sharpe suggested in a recent lecture on the geographical distribution of birds before the Royal Institution of London that there was once a great continent with its center at the South Pole, now submerged under 2,000 fathoms of ocean. It embraced, he said, South America, Madagascar, Mauritius, New Zealand and Australia; and thus he explained the existence of the cognate struthious birds that now exist, or once existed, in those countries.

—Chemists turn scrap iron into ink, old bones into lucifer matches, the shavings of the blacksmith shop into Prussian blue, fusel oil into oil of apples and pears, the drainings of cow houses into fashionable perfumery, beggars' rags into new pilot coats, cesspool filth into ammonia, and tar waste into aniline dyes and saccharine. In Paris they first utilize rats to clear the flesh from the bones of carcasses, then kill the rats, use up their fur for trimmings, their skin for gloves, their thigh bones for toothpicks, and their tendons and bones for gelatine wrappers.

—It is a familiar fact that persons born deaf are usually mute not from any congenital defect in the organs of speech, but from the fact that, never having heard others speak, they cannot imitate articulate utterance. It is probably true, too, that the source of some current errors of speech among those who are not esteemed deaf lies in a defect of hearing. Many persons who habitually tack on the "r" sound to words edding in "w" say that they are unable to distinguish, for example, between "law" and "lor."

—Masks are of very ancient origin. In a tomb 3,000 years old, at Mycenæ, Dr. Schliemann found two bodies with faces covered by masks of gold. One of the masks represented the head of a lion. Among ancient Greeks the lion mask was a sign of distinction. With the Peruvians of old it was a mark of royal lineage. In a grave of considerable antiquity in Peru a silver mask was found on the head of a mummy. The mummy of a prince, who lived in the reign of Rameses II., discovered in a small vault at Memphis in Egypt, had a mask of gold leaf over the face.

—An Antarctic whaling and sealing company designed to operate on a large scale is being formed in Dundee. The promoters propose to fit up a depot on the Falkland Islands, where sealskins could be salted, so that the ships could make several trips from there to the grounds, large steamers being employed to bring home the catches. The experts who went with the recent Dundee expedition aver that not only are whales and seals found in much greater numbers in the south than in the north, but that an Antarctic sealskin of the second class is at least as good as an arctic skin of the first grade.

The White House Carpet.

If any ocular proof of the persistence of office-seekers is needed, it exists in the White House carpets. They look as if they could never be made to smile again. The one on the stairs leading to the office best shows what the impatient feet of the ninety-nine thousand would-be government employes have accomplished. It is a heavy Axminster, held in place by long nails with big steel heads, instead of stair rails. The nail is fully three inches long, but since the rush there is a decided scarcity of the shining heads, and the tread of the office-seeker has pulled out even these great spikes, and a couple of dozen of them have been picked up and put away. The carpet looks as if a regiment of giants had been executing a double shuffle on the stairs for the last month. Any extra demand for stair carpet at the White House ought to be granted without demur by the congressmen who have brought the office-seekers along and helped add to the wear and tear.—Kate Field's Washington.

WAGES OF THE CHINESE.

Four Dollars a Month and Feed and Clothe Yourself Considered Good Pay.

To estimate the pay of working people at sixty cents and one dollar per month and board would doubtless be misleading to many who are not familiar with economics in China, says Lanthorne Leitch, late missionary to China, though if a nearly approximate figure could be arrived at the discrepancy would after all appear to us a small matter. The whole of a high estimate would to most westerners seem little more than a joke, but small differences are so important to Chinamen there that I beg leave to make a somewhat fuller statement of the matter than I could do in a sermon—illustrations I only wish that I had at hand. The figures here given are, perhaps, very nearly correct for the section of China in which I lived, near Shanghai, where wages are doubtless higher than in most other parts of China.

I would not attempt to say what the smallest wages are. I have known personally of wage-earners getting about twenty-five cents per month and very poor food. Apprentices work long terms, much of the time doing skilled work, at a total cost to the employer of less than $1.50 per month. Sixty cents to one dollar per month and board would include uncounted thousands of boatmen, clerks and household servants, and perhaps overstate the facts considerably. Many of the blacksmiths, coolies or burden bearers, basket and bamboo workers, and others would also most likely fall into the same category. Carpenters working by the day get about fifteen cents per day and clothe and feed themselves, but take the risk, of course, of lost time. Other "journeymen" work, so far as I know, does not vary much from this figure—carpenters, masons, bricklayers, etc., being about the same. Almost any of these, however, would doubtless be glad to get work at $4 a month gross.

But the difference in wages does not give a correct idea of the difference in cost of doing work. The Chinaman goes at a leisurely gait. Carpenters will come late in the morning, perhaps 9 o'clock, and as a prelude to work take a long smoke and chat while sitting on the timbers or stones of the unfinished building. Twelve or 1 o'clock brings the dinner hour, followed by another smoke, and at 5 or 6 o'clock they bundle up the tools. Chinese contractors submit to this. It seems to be custom, and custom is law with them. Those who work by the month, however, keep longer hours, and many who work for themselves are steadily at work from early morning till dark.

The wage-worker's condition is also much alleviated by the high purchasing power of money. Good rice can usually be had for one and a half cents a pound. It forms the body of the diet in seaboard China. Beans, greens, wheat flour—mainly used in the shape of noodles—a little vegetable oil and still less meat are lubricators for the rice. Life is thus possible to the average member of the masses.

But there are Chinese who say our condition is only a transitory stage to a state like their own.—Kansas City Star.

THE WORLD'S AGRICULTURE.

THE Florida orange crop is unusually good this year, and at least four million boxes will be marketed.

IT is estimated that the melon crop of Georgia this year is worth nearly a quarter of a million dollars to the farmers and about a hundred thousand dollars to the railroads in the state.

CHILI is the most prosperous agricultural country of South America. There are 7,010,000 acres under cultivation, of which 1,100,000 are irrigated. For many years the product has averaged 450,000 tons of wheat and 150,000 of other grains.

ONE of the most productive sections of the world is the Russian province of Bessarabia, taken from Turkey in 1878. Its vineyards often yield three hundred gallons of wine per acre; the average yield of wheat is thirty-five bushels and of maize sixty bushels.

THE grasshoppers have made a raid on the Choccolocco valley, Ala., and are destroying the crops. The farm of Captain T. G. Bush was attacked, and a three-acre field of clover was completely eaten up in twenty-four hours. Not a trace of vegetation could be seen. Scores of men are working to get rid of the pests.

"German Syrup"

Justice of the Peace, George Wilkinson, of Lowville, Murray Co., Minn., makes a deposition concerning a severe cold. Listen to it. "In the Spring of 1888, through exposure I contracted a very severe cold that settled on my lungs. This was accompanied by excessive night sweats. One bottle of Boschee's German Syrup broke up the cold, night sweats, and all and left me in a good, healthy condition. I can give German Syrup my most earnest commendation." ⑦

—Advertise in the GAZETTE.

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

—If you want brick go to John Coolen's.

--Andrew Sandberg has removed his shoe store to the old post office building.

--C. S. Hawker, Delano's representative at Hamline is trying for a good position in Hamline's foot ball team.

—The village council donated $100 to the Delano Cornet Band at their Monday evening meeting we are informed.

--Cool mornings and evenings have had the usual effect to bring out the heating stoves and prepare them for winter.

—Parent to his son a pupil in the Delano Public School. "What ails you?" "What makes you lame?"

Son. "I didn't hit the foot ball."

—Rev. R. H. Hughes, a recent graduate of Yale College will preach at the Presbyterian church at 10:30 a. m., next Sabbath. All are invited to be present.

—The village council have called a meeting of the citizens of the village of Delano, for next Monday evening, Sept. 25th, at 8 p. m. to discuss the advisability and feasability of building a dam across Crow River.

—Some of the most enterprising farmers in this vicinity have begun to remove the manure from the alleys to their farms, where it has, by experience, been found to pay for the trouble and time spent in hawling it.

—One of the signers of the petition to the city council to call a meeting to discuss the dam business informed us a few days since that he did not favor having a dam but only signed because they all did and to save hard feelings.

—Be sure to attend the meeting at the city hall, next Monday evening, at 8 p. m. and learn if you can what the advantages and disadvantages of building a dam across the river at this place would be, and whether or not you favor the scheme.

--The Board of Education are getting right down to business and propose to have a good school or know why it is not. They have arranged for two members of the board to visit the school each week, and ascertain for themselves that things are as they should be.

—Quite a number of farmers in this vicinity planted small patches of sorghum last spring and now have the pleasure of using some of the finest syrup ever produced in this country while their neighbors have difficulty in securing enough sugar to put up their usual supply of preserves.

—Johnny Haffner, who is fond of sweet things informs us that he has an uncommonly paying swarm of bees. This summer they have produced 75 pounds of honey and swarmed twice. He sold the two new swarms for $7, and $11 worth of honey, netting him $18, besides what honey they wanted at home. Three other swarms in the same yard did noehing.

—The post office is now entirely established in its new quarters, Esquire Billing having brought the commission of the newly appointed up yesterday morning, having found it where it had been during Wednesday night's rain storm, in the alley near Mat. Tomper's blacksmith shop. It was probably thrown out from the old quarters with some rubbish left there.

—Our village council had the power, quite evidently, to appropriate the village funds to priyate parties, to donate $100 to the cornet band, but did this make it legally or morally right, more than it made it legally or morally right for Phil Scheig to appropriate 15 or 20 thousand dollars of the funds of the Bank of Minneapolis entrusted to his care to the use of himself and friends? It appears to us to be about the same kind of power.

—Old papers for sale at this office.

—Brick $8 per 1000 at John Coolen's.

—If you need lime, call on John Coolen. 27.

--Abundance of rain has fallen this week to satisfy the most exacting in this line.

—The new crossings being laid with 4 inch plank look as if they will wear for a few years.

--The German Evangelical church held a conference here this week which was well attended.

--Mrs. J. D. Young, who has been sick for sometime, jumped from a third story window in the hotel this morning, but is reported as not much hurt, having struck on a shed.

—Several more of our business men are considerably interested in settling up the accounts of a recent citizen of Delano. It would almost be impossible to get a few of our b m. to sign bonds for their grandmothers now.

—The Eagle seems to delight in running down our railroad facilities, and in other ways injuring our village. What did she ever come here for if she didn't like the railroad? Perhaps this part of the country is becoming too much civilized for her. If Jim Hill should fail some Thursday morning to have the "old bird's" plate matter on hand she would be a pretty looking aspect. Sure.

John Nystrom, of Watertown, was doing business in Delano on Wednesday.

C. J. Buckley and H. E. Grafft made a trip to the twin cities Saturday over the Soo.

H. W. Phelps and E. H. McGannon, of Litchfield visited Geo. Blackwell, this morning.

Vice President Rader and wife of Independence were in town at the close of last week.

Messrs. D. D. Ames and Louis Mattison and A. Woolford, of Rockford were in town Saturday.

Henry Parslow left on Saturday for Enderlin, N. D., where he will aid the Soo road for awhile.

Messrs Rieck and Smith, of Albion were in attendance on the Luthern conference here, this week.

J. H. Hoover, of Howard Lake made the Wright County Bank at this place a visit on Saturday.

I. P. Harvey, of Rockford, was a Delano visitor yesterday. He is as strongly Democratic as ever.

J. E. Brothers and family have returned to Delano and now occupy their North River street residence.

Burt Manchester, principal of the Watertown school, visited Delano on Saturday in Search of a Civil Government.

Banker Roosen says he has been offered $10. for a half interest in 28 acres of corn and fodder. He will inspect it before selling.

William Kespohl has returned from Duluth and is canvassing this and Carver county for soap. He makes a good traveling man.

Prof. William Kennedy, formerly of Maple Plain, writes us that he has just begun teaching a ten months school at Dawson, N. Dakota.

Theodore Goodmanson, who has charge of the supply yard at Willmar, was shaking hands with old friends in Delano on Saturday.

County Cullings.

The stores of W. W. Webster, and W. L. Johnson, at Clearwater, were robbed recently, also the post offices at Elk River and Sauk Centre.

The Howard Lake folks promise that the county fair to be held from the 26th to the 29th inclusive, at that place, will be one of the best ever held in the county.

Our neighboring village of Waverly appears to be receiving considerable notoriety in the city papers at present. The claim is made that the laws are too laxly administered.

The 4th Quarterly meeting of the Delano circuit will be held at the M. E. church in Delano on Wednesday afternoon and evening Sept. 27, Presiding Elder Stafford to preside.

Assistant Superintendent.

And so the County Commissioners voted to allow the superintendent of schools a deputy? Of course for the start it is going to be no more than 40 days in the year, or say a couple of hundred dollars squeezed out of the already overtaxed people, but I say for the start, the beginning is made and in a few years it will be a thousand. Now I claim that Mr. Lindsley does not now work one-third the time at the business and if he thinks the work too much, let him resign the office and I am satisfied a hundred would jump at the chance to work for half the pay that Mr. Lindsley gets, and do it just as well, or let Mr. L. first give up his insurance, notary and law business, and then he may find time to attend to the duties of superintendent, for which he draws nearly $1200 a year.

Worth Reading.

If there is religion in your politics you will be pretty sure to vote right.

God tempts no man, but he tries every one who claims to love him, to let him find out whether he does or not.

The man who reforms and remains among his old associates, is like one who locks his house and leaves the key in the door.

The man who rejects Christ until tomorrow is like a poor, starving tramp, who refuses bread until he can buy a farm and start a grist mill.

The devil probably feels that he has done a good day's work when he has persuaded a one-talent man that he can't do anything God will notice.

China has spoken on the Geary law. Uuless the next congress makes amends, all Americans will be expelled from China. This would be no more than just, if the provisions of the Geary law were enforced.

Some people in this world are chiefly employed in killing time. Time will eventually be revenged by killing them. A Christian always treats time as a guest—one who can tarry but a night. Time will return such hospitality an hundred fold.--Ram's Horn.

THE REAL MOTHER-IN-LAW.

Who was it taught my wife to bake
A loaf of bread or fancy cake
And appetizing dishes make?
My mother-in-law.

Who was it, when my wife was ill,
Bestowed upon her care and skill,
And saved to me a nurse's bill?
My mother-in-law.

Who, when my little ones prepared
Each morn for school, who for them cared,
And all their little sorrows shared?
My mother-in-law.

Who was it, when their prayers were said,
So snugly tucked them into bed,
And till they slept beside them stayed?
My mother-in-law.

Who for my clothing then took care,
Who overlooked my underwear,
And kept each garment in repair?
My mother-in-law.

Who oft to me her aid was lent,
To buy the coal and pay the rent,
Who'd gladly see me president?
My mother-in-law.

A loving grandmother is she,
A generous friend she's been to me,
Forever honored let her be,
My mother-in-law.

—Sel.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

WHEN THE VILLAGE PAPER'S PRINTED.

When the village paper's printed and the "devil's" hurrying feet
Have carried all the "singles" to the office down the street;
When the roller and the forms are washed, and the pastepot put away,
Then the editor in comfort closes up his "busy day."

With tilted chair, and feet upon the old desk mounted high;
With pipe and pouch, and office cat ranged contemplative by—
He scans the paper over, and notes with conscious pride
That he's got "a blame good number," and lots of ads beside.

The inside may be "patent," but the outside is all right;
Though the ads are "slung together" and the page needs "plaining down,"
It's the paper that the people want, and not the one from town.

The old "long primer leaded" tells the news in homely way;
Not forgetting Jones' big pumpkin, nor the wedding 'cross the way.
Nor how the corners' Glee Club on Thursday night will sing,
Nor yet the last church social, nor the signs of early spring.

Then we glance across the pages to the "double column ads,"
Set in good old full-faced roman, and quite free from modern fads,
And beside them are the smaller—"Wanted," "Notice," and "For Sale,"
And the minion "writs of fi. fa." with their ofttimes mournful tale.

The type is worn with countless squeezes 'neath the platen's strain;
Its face is battered here and there—'twill ne'er look new again,
Both editor and press are old; they show their age today;
But the paper will live on and thrive when both have passed away.

REV. E. D. NEAL, of St. Paul, the oldest protestant minister in the state passed away on Tuesday. He was one of Minnesota's pioneers, and acted well his part.

THE St. Paul Globe and News are still pursuing the villans. They advertise their business much more effectually than do the police authorities. Adversisers are bound to catch the trade.

WE are in receipt of an interesting and instructive pamphlet from the State Board of World's Fair managers giving a map and a very good description of our state. Though brief it is to the point. We were not very favorably impressed with the Indian girl on the cover of the book. The board might have found lots better looking ones.

STEWART, the silver Congressman, from Nevada, seems to be of an investigating turn of mind. He wants the President of the United State looked after. That's business, if any suspicion of wrong doing crops out see to it at once, but while he is at it we hope he will turn his microscopic investigating apparatus fully onto the records of some of the bonanza business in the silver states. Give us both sides of the affair. Investigate thoroughly.

IT appears to be fashionable for Republicans to trade away from home all they can, while crying "home protection," as loud as they can squal. The Minnesota University sends clear to Ohio for rock for building purposes. The Republican village council of Delano sends out of the village for legal advice. While an occasional farmer who belives thoroughly in "home protection," his own little home, and thinks he can do better drives to the city to trade. Great things this "home protection!" About election time the Rtpublicans cry. "protect home industry." "Bring your markets to your doors" and then go home load up their wagons and drive off in search of the "cheapest place to buy."

Post Offices.

The Buffalo GAZETTE last week, in an editorial on postoffice appointments, appears to take substantially the same view that we do in regard to local political manipulations. The doctor, however is very guarded in his language and rather mysterious. He has a mortal dread that he may say something that will be pronounced unorthodox Democracy and in the vain attempt to keep in with all sides, he only succeeds in becoming unintelligible. He says for example that "Mr. Tanner will have to hunt further back than Maj. Baldwin's advent among us for some of his political blunders." Why the editor of the Tribune or anyone else should care to hunt for Maj. Baldwin's blunders among the musty records of the forgotten past, we fail to comprehend. It is the living present with which we propose to deal. Dr. Catlin has sustained a severe shock resulting from the surprise he felt at our "plain talk." We regret exceedingly that we should have said a single word to shock the feelings of the editor of the Buffalo GAZETTE, but he will get accustomed to it and the remarks that ruffle his feelings today will soon fail to create even a ripple of excitement in the printing office of our orthodox and straight laced neighbor. We do not by any means approve of the remedy suggested by the genial doctor because we do not think that it goes to the root of the evil. He tells us that we should send wideawake men as delegates to the county conventions. The men are wide-awake already. What we need is honorable, fair-minded conduct after the victory has been won But to leave the vague and cloudy atmosphere in which the GAZETTE delights in dwelling and to come at once to the point at issue. We have no time to beat the devil around a stump and so we will conclude by asking the Buffalo GAZETTE a few questions which we will be pleased to have it answer regardless of whose ox is gored:

1. Do you believe that a postmaster should be appointed in any village without consulting the wishes of the democratic patrons of the office?
2. Do you think that it is right to select a congressional committeeman from Wright county without giving the democratic congressional delegates a chance to be heard?
3. Do you consider that Maj. Baldwin's representative in this county should sign two petitions recommending different men for the same office?
4. Do you consider that it is right to urge men to be candidates for the postoffice and then go back squarely on them?
5. Don't you believe that the men who aided in Maj. Baldwin's election are entitled to have some voice in regard to the postoffice where they get their mail?
6. Do you think that Maj. Baldwin is primarily responsible for the acts which he endorses by giving effect to the recommendations?

When the esteemed editor of the Buffalo GAZETTE has answered these questions, we will ask him a few more. All we request is, that he favor his readers with our queries and simply place the word "yes" or "no" underneath. Let his conscience be the sole judge and reply simply from an ethical standpoint, the standpoint of morals which ought to regulate the dealings of man to man.—Waverly Tribune.

If our inteligent neighbor of the Tribune desires to deliver a lecture on each of the questions propounded to us he has our permission to do so. We understand from the above that he will shun historical facts and deal only with the present.

Mass Meeting.

The meeting of citizens called to discuss the subject of building a dam across Crow river, at this point, was held at the city hall, on Monday evening. Mayor Vorse called the meeting to order and stated that "the object of the meeting is to get an expression of the people as to whether we shall build a dam." I Gutzwiller was elected chairman but declined to serve. Vorse was nominated but did not desire to act. Hi Dyer refused, "wish to speak on the subject." C. W. Ingerson was then nominated but said, "I am not a citizen of the village" and refused to act. C. H. Vorse was again nominated and this time elected and accepted the arduous duties.

C. J. Buckley was nominated for secretary, but refused to serve, and O. L. Billings was elected to fill that position.

Chairman Vorse then announced: "Now gentlemen, the meeting is open for discussion." After quite a spell of silence, so long as to remind one of a Quaker meeting, Ex-Mayor Coolen moved "that the meeting now adjourn," which was seconded, and voted down.

Chairman Vorse again stated the object of the meeting, and said "about 60 citizens petitioned the council to build a dam. The council is only the custodian of the village funds and it remains for the people to say if they wish their money expended for this purpose."

Secretary Billings then moved that "It is the sense of this meeting that the village build a dam."

Hi Dyer rose to enquire of the Village President "if the survey is in the hands of the council?" President Vorse replied that he could not inform the gentleman, whereupon Mr. D. proceeded to expatiate upon the necessity of having a dam for water works and fire purposes. He claimed that it could be done cheaper now on account of the number of idle men (the orator ought not to advocate the lessening of wages of the working men for city work, it don't come well from him). The speaker thought an expert once claimed that $400 would build a dam, while Wescott had offered to build one for $200, and thinks that $700 anyway would build a good one. A four foot dam would back water only to the burying ground and injure nobody.

Mayor Vorse thinks a dam would make the town present a better appearance, but that no power, of consequence, could be had. Has had some experience in the business himself and don't believe with a four foot dam and a wheel requiring a hundred cubic inches of an opening in the dam that the water, when the dam was full, would last over four hours.

Ex-Mayor Coolen thinks if there is a surplus in the Treasury that must needs be gotten rid of that it would be better for the village to buy a park with it before lands can't be had where we want them.

I. Gutzwiller, Jr., "favor a survey by a competent engineer to ascertain how much head can be got, and what damages will be sustained.

Secretary Billings remarked that with a four foot dam the water will not go out of the banks.

Chas. W. Ingerson thinks that if it only banks up to his place it will be nice for boating, getting ice, etc.

L. P. Probst said, "Surveyor Fletcher once surveyed the stream and reported that a four foot dam or 4 feet 6 inch dam, would not injure up to Coolen's place. The report of Surveyor Fletcher ought to be somewhere."

I. Gutzwiller, Jr., wants a competent surveyor who can make a plat showing to the 1-10th of an acre how much land will be over-flowed."

L. M. Maxfield undertook to give some idea about the drift of water, but the audience seemed bound they would not understand the drift of his argument.

Ex-Mayor Coolen fears a dam would damage his farm, the Walker dam did. It is only a river street scheme anyway.

I. Gutzwiller, Jr., thought best to have a competent survevor tell just what damage would be done and what head could be got. Perhaps with a six-foot dam some power could be got, when the village would not need to build a dam. Private parties could do that.

Dr. Catlin wanted to know what the village wanted of power?

I. Gutzwiller, Jr., said, "perhaps to run a dynamo for lights; or, perhaps newspapers could be run with it."

Dr. Catlin moved to amend the motion before the house by adding the clause that "if any private individual desires to survey the river, for a dam, he be allowed to do so at his own expense." As it appears that there is a scheme to have the town do the work and lawing necessary to get the dam and then allow private parties to reap the benefits, if there be any. The survey has once been made and the report together with the plat of grading the streets, which did not seem to suit certain indiyiduals has mysteriously disappeared. Everybody here knows that the Rockford mill, supplied by this stream and an other, the north fork, much larger, cannot run for want of water, at times; therefore, it is an established fact that a steady power of any consequence, could not be obtained here. A dam can be built, but all the competent engineers in the country can't fill it with water all the time, and make a steady water power.

Secretary Billings thought perhaps a two-horse power could be had.

Dr. Catlin said, "if that is all that can be had it would be better to have a team of horses, or a wind mill. It wouldn't cost so much."

I. Gutzwiller, Jr., said where he could he preferred to have work done by something without feeling or a soul.

Dr. Catlin would like to know which the gentleman thinks has feelings or a soul. The horses or the wind mill?

Chairman Vorse declared Dr. Catlin's amendment out of order, and the vote was taken on the original motion declaring it the sense of the meeting that the village build a dam. Motion carried. Dr. Catlin wished to know if the village council would feel themselves bound to act on the vote of a part of the citizens assembled here.

I. Gutzwiller, Jr., said that they could do as they see fit, there is no law compelling them to act on this vote, and moved that "the village council be requested to have a competent surveyor make a thorough survey of the river." Carried.

Dr. Catlin said, "if a surveyor comes here it will be well to make all the use of him that we can, and I move that if a surveyor is hired that he also be hired to establish grades on the streets." Motion carried.

Meeting adjourned.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 22, 1893.

The humiliation of Tom Reed and his lieutenant, Burrows, of Michigan, when they learned that the democrats of the House proposed to put an effectual quietus upon republican filibustering against the reporting of the Tucker bill for the repeal af all laws authorizing the presence of U. S. officials at elections, was a pleasing sight to democratic eyes. Because the democrats of the House in the adoption of regular rules had been extremely lenient towards the minority the republicans assumed that no check would be put on their filibustering. They were given a free rope for awhile because there was not a quorum of democrats present, but as soon as a quorum of democrats was on hand they were effectually squelched by an order reported from the committee on Rules and the bill was reported to the House. This order was not the result of any assumption of power by a single individual, as were the rulings of Tom Reed when he was Speaker; it was authorized by a democratic caucus as such things always should be. The republicans are to be allowed to name any resonable length of time during which the debate on this bill shall be carried on, but they are not to be allowed to fillibuster against a vote upon it after legitimate debate has been exhausted.

The public tariff hearings were concluded this week, and the democrats on the House Ways and Means committee are now at work upon the new bill. Although the number of days were fewer than were given by some of the other committees, more time was given the committee than was ever given before for public hearings. Chairman Wilson, speaking of the preparation of the new tariff bill, said: "The democratic members will work together, while others will be referred to subcommittees for preparation, previous to being revised by the full democratic membership of the committee. It is not possible to say when the bill will be completed, but it will require more time than some of those who have never had a tariff bill to prepare seem to think necessary. We might fix up a measure in very short order, but it is not that kind of a bill we want to present to the country. Legislation affecting so many interests must be very carefully considered and its effect calculated before we can hope to perfect a bill which will stand the many tests to which it will be subjected when enacted into a law. Such a measure as this cannot be successfully hurried. We shall, however, lose no time, and hope to present it to the House at the earliest possible moment consistent with the important interests involved."

Several times this week the Senate has aroused public expectation by appearing to be on the eve of the final contest over the Voorhees repeal bill, but the end is not yet. Senator Mills, of Texas, made one of the strongest speeches of the week, in favor of repeal; Senator Voorhees made a characteristic explanation of his position, in answer to criticisms because he has not yet forced a vote, calling the attention of the country to the fact that it is simply impossible to force a vote under the present rules of the Senate, rules which have not been materially changed for mor than eighty years, and the republican Senators, for and against the bill, had a regular monkey and parrot time among themselves. It is expected that the attempt to reach a vote by means of continuous session of the Senate will be made in a few days, (the daily sittings haye already been lengthened) and if that fails the bill will either have to be abandoned or a compromise reached by concessions on both sides, be adopted. President Cleveland is still confident that the bill can be passed and for that reason declines to consider anything in the shape of a compromise.

Claus Spreckels, the sugar king, was in Washington a few days ago for the purpose of getting his fingers in the Hawaiian pie, but he cut short his way when he learned that the whole matter was already settled so far as the administration is concerned, and that President Cleveland is only waiting for the Senate to dispose of the Voorhees bill before he sends it a special message on Hawaii, accompanied by Mr. Blount's reports.

In nominating William B. Hornblower, of New York, to succeed the vacancy in the Supreme Court left by the death of Justice Blanchford, and J. J. Van Alen, of Rhode Island, to be Ambassador to Italy, President Cleveland sprung a double surprise on the politicans. The fitness of both gentlemen for the positions to which they have been nominated is conceded by all, and there will be no trouble about their confirmation.

The second edition of The Cosmopolitan for September brought the total edition up to 211,000 copies, without doubt the largest edition of any magazine in the world for this month. It remained for The Cosmopolitan to have the World's Fair treated in a single number by twelve different writers. As the exposition of 1893 must remain one of the leading events in the history of the United States, the most distinguished men were asked to prepare this magazing volume, which is destined to become valuable as one of the most perfect descriptions of the World's Fair. Among the number of those who contribute are our only ex-president, Walter Besant, the most distinguished of the English literary men who visited the exposition, and a host of others. Besides the usual fiction, including a story by Mark Twain, entitled, "Is He Living or is He Dead," and the regular departments, The Cosmopolitan contains nearly one hundred illustrations devoted to the World's Fair, including eleven full pages. It is pronounced one of the most remarkable of the publications yet issued regarding the Fair. It is a completely illustrated guide or souvenir, as one prefers to call it, by the most famous writers of the day, put before the reader at the price of 12½ cents, and more than the equal of the books of the Fair which sell for 75 cents and one dollar. 52-1

CASSIUS M. CLAY, who is eighty-three, attributes his continued mental and physical vigor to the fact that he has never used stimulants in the course of his life.

A TOBACCO plant produces 360,000 seeds. A single cigarette produces about the same number of seeds of disease, and there's not much tobacco in it either.

AT Roman marriages the wedding ring was placed on the thumb. At modern North American weddings the ring is placed upon the third finger and the husband is placed under the bride's thumb.

AN Arizona bank cashier nailed to the door the legend: "This bank has not busted; it owes the people $36,000; the people owe it $55,000; it is the people who are busted; when they pay, we'll pay."

THE dress coat for waiters is to be abolished in the leading Swiss hotels. This will go far toward depriving them of one of their long enjoyed privileges, that of being mistaken for noblemen in temporary difficulty.

THE biggest percentage of increase in population on record in this country was made when the Cherokee strip acquired 100,000 inhabitants in a few hours. Not all of them will remain, but it was a very respectable boom for an off year, nevertheless.

THE gentlemanly proprietor of the street corner telescope says business is looking up. The financial jest first gained currency during the panic of 1887, but it has the ring of the true metal and ought to be good for several more periods of depression.

HERR MOST says this country is so rich that if the rich would divide with the poor it would not be necessary for anybody to do any work for ten years, and all the while everybody could live on champagne and oysters. Who's going to cook the oysters?

THE ancient Indians of the Ohio valley made coins of anthracite coal. This is only additional evidence that there is nothing new under the sun. The fuel dealers are to-day coining money from the same material, though in a more indirect manner. Those Indians knew a precious mineral when they saw it.

THAT "pickpocket with a conscience" who returned a railroad ticket which he had taken from a lady's pocket at the world's fair is a most remarkable man in more respects than one. A man who prosecutes a successful search for a woman's pocket and then has any trace of conscience left is certainly a phenomenon.

TRAMPS cost Germany a few years ago, it is estimated, $15,000,000 annually for alms and food. A system of 2,300 work stations and lodging houses, located at intervals equal to about a half day's tramp, has practically wiped out the evil. Any man who tramps in Germany has to make a business of it and earn his meal by manual labor.

SEXTONS are proverbially long-lived men. Not many of them, however, can surpass the record of Mrs. Sarah Kitchen, who recently departed this life at the age of 93, she having been for seventy-four years the faithful sextoness of a Leicestershire church. Thus it is proved that, in still another direction, women can meet men on the same ground and hold their own.

ON November 7 next the present electors of Colorado will vote upon a constitutional amendment which declares that every female person shall be entitled to vote at all elections, and in the same manner in all respects as male persons. In effect its adoption will be the striking out of the word "male" from the present voting laws It is proposed to give the franchise to women under precisely the same conditions as it is given to men.

FOR the first time in the history of the country the outgoing ships are more crowded than the incoming ones from Europe. This unprecedented emigration movement is the result of the hard times, says the Chicago Journal, and will have a beneficial effect in relieving the temporary congestion of unemployed in the United States. But it is unfortunate that the class which is going is not the one that we are most anxious to deport. The outgoing passengers are said to be mostly coal miners and farm workers.

THE grave of ex-President James K. Polk has been removed from the old Polk place in Nashville, Tenn., to the capitol grounds in that city. President Polk in his will directed that the Polk place should always remain in the possession of the family and that each time the property changed hands it should always go to the most worthy member of the family. This provision was declared illegal by the courts two years ago, in consequence of which the estate was sold. To effect the removal of the ex-president's tomb, the Tennessee legislature made an appropriation of $1,500.

ELECTRICITY and steam had their first tug of war at the world's fair. An old Baltimore & Ohio engine weighing 31½ tons was pitted against an electric engine weighing 25 tons. They were coupled with a cable 20 feet long. At a signal both were "pulled wide open." The electric engine buzzed and scattered lightning over the surrounding country, but was unable to budge the ancient engine. The latter simply gave a couple of puffs and walked away with the lightning bug. This will be good news for those who hate to see an old institution depart. The locomotive is here to stay a little while longer.

MRS. CYRUS W. FIELD, wife of the young man who bears his illustrious father's name, has made a commendable innovation by becoming a partner in a New York millinery house. Her husband's portion of the senior Field's estate was squandered by the elder brother in whose trust he had confided it, and now, while he is trying to retrieve his fortunes as American consul at Brunswick, Germany, his wife has not only embarked her money in a business venture, but will also devote her time to it as well. Mrs. Field says she sees no reason why a woman should not become a good "business man."

THE way freight on Lake Shore railway met with a bad collision at McMillan, six miles east of Marshfield, Wis. The train was made up of 18 or 20 freight cars. Rev. James Brown, Chris Vogt, Alfred Cook, of Unity, and a stranger occupied the caboose. Just before reaching McMillan there is a steep grade. The train had just cleared the grade when a coupler broke, leaving the second section to follow the first. Unaware of the break, the engineer pulled up at McMillan, when the last section came tearing down the first, telescoping the two sections and throwing one car from the track. The shock was terrible, throwing passengers the full length of the caboose. Alfred Cook struck his head on the water cooler, causing concussion of the brain. The other passengers escaped without serious injuries, but were badly bruised.

BAFFLED BANDITS.

They Undertake to Rob a Train Near St. Joseph, Mo.—Their Plans Known in Advance—A Decoy Train Swarming with Armed Men Sent Out—It Is Stopped by the Gang and a Battle Ensues—Two of the Robbers Killed and the Rest Captured.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Sept. 27.—The men who tried to rob the Kansas City, St. Joseph & Council Bluffs express train Sunday night were residents of this city, and the two killed were Fred Kohler, aged 19, who lived with his young wife at 1815 South Tenth street, and Hugo Engel, stepson of Henry Gleitze, proprietor of the Occidental hotel. Four other men, John Gleitze, N. A. Hearst, Charles Fredericks and Will Garver, were captured.

The officers of the Kansas City, St. Joseph & Council Bluffs Ry, have known for some time that an attempt would be made to rob one of their trains, and preparations were made to capture the robbers. Detective P. T. Locke first received information about the proposed robbery August 11, and he has since been in constant communication with the railway officials concerning it.

Friday night was fixed for the deed, but owing to the fact that the robbers got the trains mixed up the train escaped. Sunday the officials of the railroad company were notified by Hearst, who turned traitor, that another attempt would be made at 1 o'clock this morning at the same place. The officials quietly sidetracked the regular train, and with a dummy train made up like the regular one, with the two rear coaches darkened to add to the deception, started for the place. In the baggage-car were fifteen armed police, commanded by Chief Broden, with Sheriff Carson and four deputies, all heavily armed. General Manager Brown and Superintendent Hohl were also in the party. Engineer Callicotte was pressed into service as an express man. He wore overalls and an empty safe and some empty boxes were put in his car to give it the appearance of doing an express business. In the first coaches were W. C. Brown, Mr. Hohl and Mr. Sanford, superintendent of the Adams Express company.

When the train reached Schutzen park, a short distance this side of the water works, a man stepped out on the track and swung a red lantern. Engineer Wright stopped his engine and he and the fireman were at once covered by a masked man with a shotgun. They were ordered to go back to the express car. When they reached the car two of the robbers pounded with their guns on the door and ordered the messenger to open it. After a short parley Callicotte threw open the door. Chief Broler and his men were concealed behind the safe and the empty boxes. When the robbers ordered the express messenger to open the door they threatened to blow up the car with dynamite, of which they had two large sticks. It was known to the officers that dymanite might be used. The express messenger pro tem. was, therefore, instructed to open the door of his car before the robbers had a chance to explode the stuff.

When the men entered the car the officers on duty were ready for them, and ordered them to throw up their hands. The robbers began the firing, and at the first fire Hearst, Fredericks and Garver, the decoys, dropped to the ground and laid down to prevent being shot. Engle leaped from the car and ran for the brush on the east side of the train, from where he continued to shoot till discovered. Kohler, whose job was to stand outside and keep passengers from coming out of the cars, was on the east side of the train also, and he poured a fire into the express car and coach. Henry Gleitze, who was on the west side of the train, fired several shots at the officers in the express and mail cars, and then ran.

Kohler proved himself to be a most desperate man. His body was pierced by forty-three bullets, yet, while he lay on the ground, he managed to fire four shots before he died. Engel was shot by fourteen bullets and lived a short time. Henry Gelitze escaped, but was captured later. The coaches were riddled with bullets and all the windows shot out. The officers escaped unharmed. Kohler married a most estimable young lady three weeks ago.

The three captured men and the bodies of the two dead bandits were placed on the train which they had attacked. The train then returned to the Francis street depot at 12:35 and the regular train went on its way. The passengers did not know what had happened. It was quick work and the train bearing the officers was back at the Francis street depot in just forty-five minutes from the time it left.

Henry Gleitze, the sixth and last member of the band, was caught at 8:30 a. m. Officers tracked him from the scene of the hold-up to the house of Mary Elsmer in South St. Joseph. His pockets were full of ammunition and three fingers of his left hand were shot off. He denied strenuously that he had taken any part in the attempted robbery, but refused to talk further.

The bodies of the dead bandits as they lay in the undertaker's rooms Monday afternoon were viewed by hundreds. At the inquest a strong attempt was made by friends of the dead robbers to show that the railroad company had evidence enough before the attempted robbery to convict the men and endeavored to prove that the railway officials were guilty of murder. The attempt failed as the verdict was simply that the men were killed while attempting to rob the tram. Public sentiment here strongly indorses the prompt and efficacious methods used by the company to protect their property.

Buckshot for Bandits.

CHICAGO, Sept. 27.—The Michigan Central has begun to arm the trainmen of all trains carrying American express or mail cars, and other railroads intend to soon follow suit. The employes have been supplied with Winchester repeating shotguns loaded with buckshot, and additional employes similarly armed have been put on, so that there will be at least ten fully armed men on each express and mail train, which force is amply sufficient to cope with any band of train robbers, no matter how well organized.

BIG BLOCKS BURNED.

Fire Started by a Cigarette Stub Causes a Loss of Nearly $1,000,000 at St. Joseph, Mo.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo., Sept. 27.—Three blocks of the finest business houses of St. Joseph are in ruins and nearly $1,000,000 worth of property has been destroyed. A cigarette stub cast into the storeroom on the fifth floor of the Townsend & Wyatt building by a careless clerk is supposed to have originated the conflagration.

The center block and the immense department house of Townsend & Wyatt are in ruins, likewise the Commercial block containing the Commercial bank, the safe deposit vaults, the Central savings bank and numerous offices, likewise the immense building occupied by the Regnier & Shoup Crockery company. The Corby block is badly damaged, as are also the Stone building and the Muhlens building, while the new building of C. B. France, the Ballinger building and the Zimmerman building are badly scorched. All these are adjacent to the Townsend & Wyatt building, Sixth and Edmond streets, where the fire started and burned the best and most modern business structures in the city. Each marked a step in the advancement of the city.

About 10 o'clock a. m. C. A. Purdy, who was passing along Edmond street, noticed a thin curl of smoke coming from the top floor of the eight-story department house of Townsend & Wyatt. By the time he could turn in an alarm flames burst from the entire top floor. When the department arrived it was found that the water pressure was bad and the firemen fought at a disadvantage. The entire building was soon in flames and Chief Kane saw there was no chance to save it. A strong wind from the north carried the flames across the street, and thence to the buildings named above. The firemen labored hard, but could make no headway against the flames.

The fire was burning fiercely from four sides and the destruction of the best business interests of the city was imminent. At this time dynamite was resorted to and a number of buildings blown up. With the help of the Topeka and Kansas City fire departments the fire was gotten under control. The principal losers are:

	Loss.	Insurance.
Townsend & Wyatt Dry Goods company	$250,000	$200,000
Central block	85,000	75,000
Hoagland block	75,000	40,000
Regnier & Shoup Crockery company	90,000	70,000
Commercial bank	80,000	Fully
Carury block	40,000	25,000
Ransome Garrett & Brewster	17,000	.....
Thirty smaller institutions	175,000

Several accidents occurred during the progress of the fire. When one of the buildings was blown up a boy, Johnny Haskins, was struck by a flying brick and badly hurt. Allen Laird and Oliver Knapp, two firemen, were thrown from a ladder into a burning building and both badly hurt, Knapp probably fatally. Chief Kane, of the fire department, was badly burned and a young man, George Hunter, fell three stories into a cellar. He was little injured, two ribs alone being broken. Several persons were hurt by falling walls, but not a fatal accident occurred during the fire.

In the seven-story building occupied by Townsend, Wyatt & Emery more than 100 persons were at work when the flames were discovered. They spread with such rapidity that the escape of many was cut off and they were forced to wait for help from the firemen.

At 2:30 o'clock the fire was entirely under control. Hard work on the part of the departments confined the fire to the block bounded by Felix and Edmond and Sixth and Seventh streets, and to the north half of the block between Edmond and St. Charles, Sixth and Seventh.

DIES FROM FRIGHT.

Death of an Adrian Girl Whose Lover Killed Himself in Her Presence.

ADRIAN, Mich., Sept. 27. — Nelson Kuney, aged 22 years, while out driving with his sweetheart, Miss Maud Brainerd, Sunday night, attempted to shoot her, and failing in the attempt fired a shot into his own head and died almost instantly. The girl was so frightened that she died in in a few hours, it is said, from the result of her experience. She said that without warning Kuney drew a revolver and pointed it at her. He pulled the trigger, but the cartridge did not explode. She threw the laprobe over his hand, and although the horse was on a run jumped out of the buggy. Kuney also jumped out and dragged the girl back to the buggy and again attempted to use the revolver. A passer-by interfered and the girl again broke away. Then Kuney placed the revolver to his own head and fired. He died almost instantly. After the shooting Miss Brainerd passed a restless night, vomiting and purging. Early in the morning she was seized with a sinking spell and before help could reach her she died. There is no doubt that her death was the result of fright from her awful experience with Kuney.

Broke His Neck.

MASCOUTAH, Ill., Sept. 27.—William Vottschoemer, a prominent farmer residing near St. Library, fell from his porch Sunday while talking to his family. His neck was broken by the fall, but the coroner's investigation developed the fact that death was caused by heart disease and that the man was dead before his neck was broken. He was an old settler, aged 75.

Killed a Sleeping Brother.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., Sept. 27.—Two brothers named Duter were playing at their home Sunday night. One of them, aged 17, playfully threw at the other a short stick with a bent wire in the end of it, a contrivance used for cleaning out an organ. He missed his aim and the sharp hook-shaped wire was imbedded in the throat of Arnold Duter, the 9-months-old brother of the boys, lying in a cradle by his mother's side. The wire severed the carotid artery and jugular vein and also the wind pipe. The child was dead in less than a minute.

HOKE COMPLAINS.

The Secretary Says He Has Been Woefully Misrepresented—He Is Not Opposed to Pensions, But Is Determined to Purge the List of Fraudulent Claimants.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 26. — Secretary Hoke Smith has made a statement regarding his position upon the pension question. He says he has often been grossly misrepresented in this matter and held responsible for acts about which he knew nothing until they had been committed; and he makes particular mention of the case of Charles T. Bennett, a private in Company F, Thirteenth Indiana volunteers, upon which an important order was issued and about which so much has been said.

Mr. Smith says it is wrong to suppose he is a common enemy to pensions. He conscientiously believes there have crept upon the pension rolls, through one avenue or another, the names of an enormous number of persons who are not entitled to pensions. "These are the ones I am after," declared the secretary, "and they are the ones I intend to weed out of the pension list, if they reduce the total number of pensioners one-half."

Referring to the order of Commissioner Lochren, that pensioners whose claims were not good upon the presentation made should be dropped from the rolls for a period of sixty days, when they must make their claims good or suffer permanent suspension. Secretary Smith says that this action was taken when he was absent from Washington, and that it did not meet his approval. He believed that a pensioner, after being once placed upon the rolls, should have notice before being dropped. Secretary Smith states that his original idea in having the list of "suspects" prepared was to have stricken from the rolls those who had failed to present prima facie evidence that they were entitled to pensions. He believes that investigation into all these cases will lead to the discovery of much fraud, and that fully half of those who have not made prima facie cases will fail in their efforts to show that they were entitled to pensions.

Many of those who were being notified that they must furnish new evidence had so little to stand upon that they would make no effort whatever. The secretary says it is a great mistake to suppose that he intended to decrease pension expenditures by depriving those who were entitled to pensions under the law of their just rewards. Referring to the fact that quite a number of pensioners who were dropped from the rolls were being reinstated, the secretary said that all of them had furnished the required evidence.

A DYNAMITE BOMB.

It Is Thrown Into a Sailor's Boardit House in San Francisco—The Building Wrecked and Five Inmates Killed—Another Badly Hurt.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 26.—One of the worst crimes in the annals of this city, resulting from a long-standing feud between union and non-union sailors, was perpetrated Saturday night. Shortly after midnight the southern part of the city was shaken by a terrific explosion. A dynamite bomb had been fired in front of a water-front boarding house filled with non-union sailors.

The front of the building was blown to atoms. Six of the inmates were horribly mangled, two of these instantly killed and three others died from their wounds. By whom the bomb was fired is not definitely known, but the owners directly charge the deed upon some members of the Seamen's union. One of the union men by the name of John Terrell has been arrested.

The boarding house was kept by John Curtin. It was Curtin's custom to secure berths for his patrons on ships employing non-union men. In this way he incurred the enmity of the sailors' union. Less than a week ago his place was entered by a crowd of union men led by John Terrell. Curtin was threatened, and when the men left his house they told him the house had only a short time to exist. Saturday night all the inmates had retired as usual and the house was quiet when the explosion occurred, shaking the city for blocks. The entire front of the boarding house was torn away, carrying the front of an adjacent structure with it.

Men were thrown from their beds across the street. The room where the explosion took place was ripped to atoms. A black hole with smoldering beams about it showed where the bomb had torn its way. Four groaning victims lay in the street near by. Beside them lay two corpses, stripped of nearly every bit of clothing. An ambulance was soon on the scene and the victims were quickly rescued from the debris and taken to the hospital. Three of the men who were wounded died Sunday, making the total fatalities five.

ROB A BANK IN DAYLIGHT.

Two Men Secure $700 at Carlton, Minn. and Overlook $5,000.

CARLTON, Minn., Sept. 26.—About 1 o'clock Saturday a bold robbery was committed here by two men who entered the Carlton county bank and held up the assistant cashier, who was alone. The men were dressed as woodsmen. One covered the cashier with a gun and the other secured $700. He overlooked $5,000 in the cash drawer against which the assistant cashier was standing. Hearing footsteps the robbers ran to the woods without completing their work. The sheriff and a posse are in pursuit.

Killed at a Country Dance.

CASEY, Ill., Sept. 26.—Information was received here at a early hour Sunday morning of a horrible cutting affray, resulting in murder, that took plnce during a quarrel Saturday night at a country dance at the farmhouse of Mass Fritz near Union Center, 6 miles northwest of this city. George McMechan received wounds which resulted fatally from a dirk knife in the hands of Charles Carpenter, son of Constable Carpenter. He died in a few moments without a word. A man named Berry, of Janesville, and two others whose names are not known received fatal wounds. Carpenter escaped

BRINGING UP CHILDREN.

Importance of a Proper Development of the Brain.

Most of this unloveliness, strange as it may seem, is thought to be the work of a badly developed brain, the eye and spine especially declaring this, but leaving it an open question whether an evil soul lodging in a body reduces it to its own likeness, or whether an ill-fed, wrongly developed body cramps and dwarfs and hurts the soul. The measure round the skull of the criminal, taken horizontally, is always less than that round the skull of the upright man, and his brain is found to be lighter; his constitution is feebler, too, and his heart is weak. But even among culprits themselves there are great differences; thus the highway robber is naturally found to be taller than the pick-pocket, and the bones of his skeleton are stronger; he and the murderer, when they write at all, write a large round hand with many flourishes; the thief writes with effeminacy a small hand. These people are apt to give the student surprises; he finds, for instance, that they are not habitually cruel; wanton murderers will be kind to a pet; where they are cruel it is the women who are the most so, and who discover the most shocking forms of cruelty; and although a few have talent, they are all wanting in the ability to use their talent to advantage; but the most of them have great stupidity. They are flighty and faithless always, clinging long to nothing. And with it all they are extraordinarily superstitious. The one satisfactory thing that comes out of all this investigation is the establishment of the fact that education diminishes the tendency to crime, and that as by slow degrees the day shall come when a whole generation is educated, the children of that generation will be born with less and less tendency to crime or to crime made easy. For education enlarges, strengthens and refines the brain, gives it closeness, determines its growth; and just so far as criminality has anything to do with the insufficient brain, education will abate it, and the malnutrition of the system, with its reflex action on the nerves, will be overcome by the work and wages that education will increase. It is not agreeable to dwell upon this dark side of human nature, but if we know nothing about it we shall do nothing for it; and surely there is not a dark spot upon the earth to whose purification we should not set our minds and hands.—Harper's Bazar.

The Greatest Medical Discovery of the Age.

KENNEDY'S MEDICAL DISCOVERY.

DONALD KENNEDY, OF ROXBURY, MASS.,

Has discovered in one of our common pasture weeds a remedy that cures every kind of Humor, from the worst Scrofula down to a common Pimple.

He has tried it in over eleven hundred cases, and never failed except in two cases (both thunder humor). He has now in his possession over two hundred certificates of its value, all within twenty miles of Boston.

A benefit is always experienced from the first bottle, and a perfect cure is warranted when the right quantity is taken.

When the lungs are affected it causes shooting pains, like needles passing through them; the same with the Liver or Bowels. This is caused by the ducts being stopped, and always disappears in a week after taking it.

If the stomach is foul or bilious it will cause squeamish feelings at first.

No change of diet ever necessary. Eat the best you can get, and enough of it. Dose, one tablespoonful in water at bedtime. Read the Label. Send for Book.

UNCLE DAVY'S SCHEME.

Why He Didn't Get the Hoped-For Reward.

Old Uncle Davy leaned upon his lawn-mower, cross and dispirited. All his blandishments and cajolings had that day failed to win a quarter of a dollar from the newcomers at the Sugar Springs summer hotel, and he feared he would go home that night without having earned the price of the tobacco for his after-supper smoke. To be sure, the hotel proprietor had offered him a dollar for mowing the hotel lawn, and with ordinary industry it could be mowed in less than a day, but Uncle Davy accounted it a direct loss to earn a dollar by the sweat of his black brow when quarters could be earned by a few adroit compliments. So the mowing of the lawn had dragged for a week, and bid fair to become like the task of Sisyphus. So slowly did Uncle Davy work that the grass verily grew under his feet, and although he had completely mowed the lawn once, the grass had grown as fast as he mowed, and he could not call the hotel proprietor to view a completed task and pay him a dollar.

"Nebber see sech a stingy set in my born'd days as dese bo'ders at de hotel," muttered Uncle Davy to himself. "Dey won't even give me one o' dem 'two-for-a-nickel' segah-es dey smokes—for I reckon dey is too stingy to smoke nuffin' mo' costly. Ah, good evenin', young marsa," he continued in a cheery tone, bowing and scraping to a smartly-dressed young fellow passing by. "Is you on a beautiful walk, 's evenin'?"

"No; I am on a board walk, Uncle Davy," replied the young fellow, with difficulty denying himself the indulgence of a smile at his own witticism.

"Glory! you's as witty as a blue jay, young marsa, an' jes' as peart an' wears as fine cloes. I knew you was a ladies' man de minnit I see you—all dressed up so fine, an' walkin' so graceful, like you dance mo'n you walk. I jes' done did do it, 'pon my soul. Whar'd you say you come from? Up norf, you say?"

"Michigan."

"Good glory! How's it seem to be down whar you kin keep warm?"

"We keep just as warm as you do."

"I reckon you all wear sheepskins; dey would keep you all warm. What town do you live in?"

"Ann Arbor."

"For de lan's sake! is dat so, young marsa? Is dat so? Befo' de wa' I use to live at Culpepper Co't House, Virginyah, on de estate of old Jedge Caringfo'd, an' I remember dat de Caringfo'd boys went to Ann Arbor, Michigan, to school. Did you know de Caringfo'd boys? Co'se not; you's too young for dat."

"I have heard of them. They belong to the same college society that I do, and I have seen their names in the society records."

"You doan' say? Glory! but I'd like to see dem Caringfo'ds. Dey was gords to me. I did lub dem Caringfo'ds. If I could only see one of 'em now I'd jest natcherly eat him right up like he was ham. De Carinfo'ds was rich. Dey had money an' land, an' servants, an' hosses, an' everything. Dey had one daughter, a red-hade. Jim Caringfo'd, he took to preachin' for awhile, den he got disgusted an' took to sellin' cotton. Doan' know what disgusted him. 'Pears like one o' de deacons in de chu'ch swapped a ole busted beaver hat fo' a bran' new silk one Jim handed him for to pass around among de congregation, and dat disgusted Jim, an' he dropped de chu'ch. Mus' you be goin', young marsa? I feel highly honored to have met you, young marsa. Much obliged for yo' company."

"Here is a quarter for you, Uncle Davy," said the young man, loftily. "They tell me at the hotel that when you stop the guests and compliment them you expect to be rewarded with a quarter."

"Gord bress you, young marsa," said the old man. "Much obliged for de quarter. Dem bo'ders at de hotel is wrong about my expectin' a quarter, when I talks to 'em. I hopes for a quarter, young marsa, but I doan' expec' nuffin' from sech a lot of stingy bo'ders as dey is at de hotel dis summer."

"Do you see that old old man across the lawn there, Uncle Davy, going down to the spring with two water-bottles? Do you ever get money from him?"

"Dat poor ole man? He's too poor. He ain't got nuffin' to give me."

"He is the richest man about here. He is that rich Mr. Bondell who has just bought that fine cottage at the other end of the grounds. He lives in St. Louis, and two years ago gave five thousand dollars to a young man who rescued him from being run over by a runaway team."

"Goodness! an' I ain't hardly been speakin' to dat ole gen'leman. I thought he was some poor ole groun'-hog that never seen a quarter. I wish a team of hosses would come runnin' in heah now after dat ole gen'leman. I'd biff 'em on de hade wif de lawn-mower. I wish he'd slip down on de parf to de spring an' ben' his neck so he'd think he was goin' to choke to death, an' I'd run up an' twis' it straight again. I'm goin' to save dat ole gen'leman's life somehow an' git five thousan' dollars. Laws-a-massy! he mus' be one o' dem milliondaires. How much is five thousan' dollars, young marsa? I reckon it wound buy all Sugar Springs an' a hunk o' Sedalia."

With the golden possibility of five thousand dollars before him, Uncle Davy could work no more that afternoon, and he put the lawn-mower in its place and followed Mr. Bondell to the spring, in the hope that some opportunity of saving the old man's life might arise. But though for days thereafter Davy followed Mr. Bondell like a black shadow wherever he went, the infirm old man never was in any strait that called for the intervention of his self-constituted guardian. At last Davy came to the conclusion that, if Mr. Bondell was to be in peril and in need of succor, he himself must be the author of the peril as well as the bearer of aid. He therefore turned over in his mind several schemes of various degrees of feasibility. He might have Mr. Bondell attacked by a fictitious nocturnal highwayman and, suddenly appearing, boldly put the highwayman to flight, but as the only person he could trust sufficiently to employ as the fictitious highwayman was his grandson Tobias, aged fifteen, and, moreover, Mr. Bondell never stirred out of doors after nightfall, he rejected the plan. At length his brain conceived a scheme that seemed absolutely faultless, and he at once proceeded to put it into execution.

A few miles from the village was a small, rocky hill, among the crevices of whose outcropping ledges lived a colony of rattlesnakes. Several of the boys of the neighborhood had achieved reputations for their skill in entrapping the deadly reptiles, and drove quite a thriving trade with the zoologically inclined summer visitors. Davy's grandson Tobias was perhaps the most successful snake-hunter of them all, and had been known to receive as much as two dollars for an exceptionally large snake. Davy had observed that it was the custom of Mr. Bondell to spend a portion of every afternoon under the shade of some trees that grew upon a great cliff overhanging the La Mine river. Every afternoon, about the time the sun-dial in front of the hotel marked the hour of three, Mr. Bondell would fill his water-bottle at the spring-house, and then, seeking the cliff, would sit for hours gazing down the deep, rock-bound gorge of the river. The cliff was a huge pillar of stone that rose from the river, entirely detached from the earth behind, inaccessible except by a little wooden bridge that spanned the chasm between its flat top and the bank. High bushes fringed the bank, and one could watch the top of the cliff unseen by anyone upon it.

At the hour of noon, when he was sure that no inquisitive guests would be about the grounds to ply him with questions, Davy stole down to the cliff, gingerly carrying a small chicken-coop against whose slats lay the folds of a large rattlesnake. Close behind him followed Tobias, bearing a forked stick, the fork just large enough to fit about the snake's neck and hold it to the ground.

"Now you, Tobe, I'll jes' hide dis box in de bushes, an' when de ole man Bondell comes down I'll let de snaik out and shove him 'long de bridge todes de ole man, an' lay ash-leaves behin', an' no rattler will cross ash-leaves. Jes' when de ole man is mos' sca'd to dyeth I'll come runnin' out wif a club an' kill de snaik. You set down an' look at de snaik while I fling away all de sticks an' stones dey is on de rock, so de ole man won't have nuffin to fight de snaik wif."

Uncle Davy soon cleared the top of the cliff of all missiles and sticks and lay down beneath a tree to plan the approaching campaign. He appreciated the value of a climax and decided to let Mr. Bondell become hard pressed before he came to the rescue, rightly arguing that the size of his reward would be commensurate with the danger Mr. Bondell experienced. From plans of the attack and rescue he passed to plans for spending the five thousand dollars, and from day-dreams he passed to real dreams, and was soon snoring melodiously. His slumbers were disturbed by a harsh, rasping sound as of tearing wood. He leaped to his feet and saw the guilty face of Tobe peering anxiously out of the bushes on the bank.

"What you doin'?" inquired Uncle Davy with severity.

"I was jes' givin' de snaik a toad to eat. De toad was too big to go frew between de slats an' I pulled off de 'en of one slat to git de toad in."

"Let dat snaik alone. He doan' want no toad. Git away from heah befo' I t'ar de hide offen you. Git away, I say!" yelled the old man.

"Cayn't I jes' put de slat—"

"Git away, I tell you," interrupted Uncle Davy as Tobe accompanied his words by a movement toward the hiding place of the snake's cage. "Git away, you triflin', wuthless nigger, ef you doan' want me to t'ar yo' hide all off an' make it into leather straps, an' whop you wif 'em until de blood done run;" and he started threateningly toward his grandson.

"I wish I knew how long I was sleepin'. I reckon it mus' be mos' time for dat ole milliondaire to come stumpin' along. Reckon I'd better git ready for him;" and Davy rose to his feet chuckling gleefully. "Gosh! won't Bondell jump when he sees dat—snaik?"

The last word was uttered in a horrified shriek, for there before him was the snake, lying coiled on the little bridge. His forked stick was lying by the snake's whilom prison. He had thrown away all means of protection when he had cast all the stones and sticks on the cliff into the river below, and now there seemed nothing to do but to cast himself after them. Tobe had been about to replace the loosened slat of the cage when ordered away so peremptorily.

The snake lay on the bridge quietly enough, and Davy cautiously approached it with a view to leaping over it, but the creature coiled itself and sprung its rattle as he drew near.

"Oh, Lordy!" groaned the poor old fellow. "I'd give a quarter to anybody who'll save my life. I wonner if I cayn't shoo him off shakin' my hat at him."

Taking his ancient headpiece of stiff white felt he hurled it at the snake and followed it by a large plug of tobacco and a clay pipe. These missiles angered the snake, and it started toward its tormentor. Davy leaped about in an ecstasy of terror, giving vent to the most frightful howls. No matter where he dodged, the snake seemed to bar the way, and at last held him a prisoner upon a sharp, projecting corner that jutted out over a deep swimming-pool in the river. He had ceased his calls for help some moments before, and a semi-calmness had succeeded his abject fear. The only way for him to escape was to leap into the river. The deep pool would effectually break his fall. He was on his knees preparatory to swinging himself off the cliff, when there was a spluttering crash before him, and the snake, crushed by a great water-bottle, writhed in agony. A second bottle followed the first, and Mr. Bondell came running across the little bridge, and, with his stout cane, proceeded to belabor out of the snake the few sparks of life yet remaining in it.

Uncle Davy stared at his preserver in silence. Providence has gainsaid the blush to the black race. In the spasmodic grin that overspread the rescued man's face it would be difficult to tell whether joy or shame was expressed.

"There, he is finished," said Mr. Bondell, exultingly, as he cut the rattlers from the tail of the mangled reptile.

Uncle Davy fumbled in his pockets irresolutely, and then, gazing at his preserver inquiringly, held out to him a grimy quarter.—Wardon A. Curtis, in Leslie's Weekly.

A LESSON IN SWIMMING.

The Art Is Not Difficult—Women Should be Skilled in It.

Though strange as it may seem, when swimming is an art easily learned, there are comparatively few women who understand even the first principles of it, and even when the papers are ringing with the accounts of many deaths by drowning, owing to the fact that bathers do not know how to swim, one-half the world still continues in ignorance of a simple accomplishment that might some day be the means of rescuing them from a watery grave.

Besides being so valuable in this particular, it is one of the most healthful and exhilarating of pastimes, as the exercise brings into play every muscle of the body, strengthening equally all of them, instead of developing one at the expense of another.

Though it is advisable to place oneself under the care of an expert, it is not necessary, for you can be self-taught if you but possess sufficient courage and perseverance. With an expert, however, you are apt to acquire a more graceful method of locomotion in the water than if you take upon yourself the trouble of learning in any way that suggests itself.

Salt water is the best to learn in. To begin with, it is much heavier than water, its buoyancy giving confidence to the novice, as it supports the body easily. Another theory advanced by a teacher whose name is among the most expert swimmers, is that in learning in salt water the bitter taste of it will compel the swimmer to keep the mouth shut and breathe through the nostrils, which is one of the most important lessons to be learned. Its temperature is also higher in summer than that of fresh water.

Quoting this authority's own words, he says: "To learn to float is the first step. This is an easy and natural performance, and when once the learner realizes that she will not sink if she keeps still and has a supply of air in her lungs, the dread and fear of sinking will be one-half vanquished. In shallow water wade out until the water is up to your armpits. The next thing to do is to turn your back to the land, bend your knees as though you were about to sit down, letting the water touch your chin, then gradually throw the head back as far as it will go. You will probably experience a most unpleasant sensation when the water first touches your ears and will feel an inclination to stand up and wade out, declaring that you will never do such a silly thing again.

"However, if you persevere and continue to slowly put the head back until the back of it is immersed and the water covers the ears entirely, you will wonder why you were so nervous in the beginning. Put up your arms and extend them behind your head as far as they will go, with the palms of the hands uppermost and slightly hollowed. Take a full breath, inflate the chest, giving a little push off from the bottom with both feet, and you will undoubtedly feel that you are about to drown, but this is not so. Your head will sink into the water and your mouth will be covered, but if you keep quiet with your mouth shut you will soon discover that your mouth and nostrils have risen above the water surface, and by keeping your legs stiffened and slightly separated the tips of your fingers, toes and knees, as well as your face and breast, will be above the water.

"Breathe through your nostrils, and unless you let your nervousness overcome you, you will be able to float in this position as long as you care to do so. It is rather hard for those who are easily frightened to counterbalance their lack of confidence, yet if these feelings are but once overcome, but a few lessons will be needed to make the novice an expert.

"After learning to float the next lesson will be in swimming. The same position should be taken, lying flat on the back, but with the hands placed at the side. After lying quietly for a time gently move the hands as paddles, sending the water toward your feet. The hands should be kept below the surface, and much to your surprise, if this thing is kept up gently, you will discover that you are slowly but surely moving ahead.

"Nine women out of ten will, at this juncture, rise up in surprised astonishment to see where they are going and will be more than horrified to discover that the water will not support them in that position, and they will take a sudden and unexpected plunge to the bottom.

"When you learn to propel yourself head forward, reverse the action of your hands and you will go feet forward. Steering can be done by using one hand more forcibly than the other, in fact, the system of paddling with the hands is exactly on a par with the use of oars. When paddling with the feet is commenced, all that is necessary to do is to strike out with your legs, with the feet apart, and bring them together again, bringing them up and repeating the stroke. It is easier to keep the feet about a foot apart beneath the surface.

"The kicking with the feet is much more easily learned than the paddling with the hands, but combination comes easily, and in steering all one has to do is to keep one leg quiet and use the other in accordance with the direction in which you wish to turn.

"The more common method of moving is on the breast. This is far more easy than on the back, but the other should be learned first, as breast swimming then becomes a very small matter indeed. As in the beginning, wade out to your armpits and turn toward the shore; join the hands in front of the chest, palms inward, with fingers and thumbs together; lean forward in the water, pushing your hands out slowly until the arms are quite straight, and move your feet gently from the bottom with a little push forward, and in this way you will propel yourself a foot or two. Repetition will make you feel confident, and then all that is needed is to use the feet.

"Begin on the leg stroke by drawing them close to the body and then kicking them out clearly, first one and then the other, reach them out their full extent, press them close together, keeping them quite straight with the toes pointed. Before the force of the leg stroke is expended turn the hands with outstretched arms and push forward and sweep through the water to the hips. This not only adds to the force of the stroke, but is a great support to the body. As your hands reach the hips draw up the legs and propel them as before, and as they cleave the water reach out your arms for another stroke down to the hips, and so on, alternating the two. By practice you will soon achieve wonders."—Philadelphia Times.

HEAT OF THE SUN.

Sustained by Gradual Contraction of the Solar Volume.

So far as our present knowledge goes, it would seem that the brightness of any sunlike body is to be attributed solely to the transformation in some fashion of mechanical power into heat. To take our own sun as an example, it is now an assured doctrine that the heat so necessary for our welfare is sustained by the gradual contraction of the solar volume. The energy available for transformation into heat in this process seems sufficient to supply the radiation of the sun, not only for ages such as those which we reckon in the human period, but even throughout a lapse of time so vast as that which geology demands for the formation of the earth's crust. But it is certain that the quantity of possible light and heat to be dispensed by the sun is limited in amount.

The sun can not shine on forever. A time must assuredly come when the mighty orb, at present so brilliant, will have no more potency for the radiation of light than is at present possessed by the earth or the moon. In like manner it can be shown that the materials constituting the sun have not always been luminous. We can not indeed say with certainty by what influence their brightness was originally kindled. It probably arose from a collision, or an approach to a collision, between two dark masses which happened to come to an encounter with enormous velocities in their progress through space. It is, however, plain that the ages through which the sun has been brilliant form only an incident, so to speak, in the infinite history of that quantity of matter of which the solar system is constituted.

Notwithstanding the millions, or thousands of millions, of years for which that matter has existed, it has, perhaps, only once become so heated, owing to circumstances which we may describe as accidental or casual, as to have acquired the ample light-dispensing power of a sun. It is, however, possible that such periods of light-radiating capacity should have occurred more than once; they may possibly have occurred several times throughout the ages of time past. Nor is it likely that the last phenomena of this kind have yet arrived.

The sun, after the lapse of uncounted years, will lose all its heat and pass into a black, dark mass. In that form it may endure for an epoch so protracted that the spell during which it has acted as the luminary of our system will appear but a moment in comparison with the dark ages which succeed the solar splendor.

But we can conceive that the darkness, which is the doom of our system, need not necessarily be eternal so far as its materials are concerned; it may be that again in the course of its wanderings through space the tide of chance may at length bring the dark and tremendous globe so near some other orb that another collision should take place with appalling vehemence. The solid materials shall again become transformed into a stupendous glowing nebula, and then, in the course of the tedious contraction of this nebula, another protracted period of brilliance will diversify the career of this great body, and may last long enough for the evolution of planets and of whole races of highly-organized creatures. The essential point for our present consideration must not be misunderstood. A little reflection will show that any periods of brilliance must be regarded as exceptional periods in the history of each body.—Fortnightly Review.

CLUBBING A COON.

The Old Man Tells a Stirring Story of His Youth.

"I never see one o' them things," said the old man as he pointed to a stuffed wildcat in the window of a taxidermist, "without rememberin' what a blamed fool I made of myself when I was a young feller of twenty. The bare recollecshun of that event is enough to bring out the goose-pimples and start an icy feelin' up and down my spine."

"What occurred between you and a wildcat?" was asked.

"It was up in Minnesota. I lived in Illinoy then, and went on a visit to my brother John. I wasn't so all-fired green fur a young man from the prairie country, but I didn't know much about wild animals. One night brother John had a sort of surprise party, and somehow or other there was a lone gal there, and I saw her home. It was a walk of two miles, mostly through the woods, and nothing speshal happened till I was on my way back and had made about half the distance. It was a moonlight night, and as I frisked along I suddenly caught sight of a coon lying on a limb which stretched over the path. Says I to myself, says I:

"'William, coon skins are worth seventy-five cents apiece, and thar's one up thar waitin' to be peeled off and nailed on the corn-crib door.'

"So I up with a club, but missed him. The durned critter spit at me and uttered a y-e-o-w, but I was busy lookin' for another club. I got one and let him hev it, and knocked him off the limb. As he fell I jumped forward to finish him. Does everything seem reg'lar to you up to that pint?"

"It does, providing it was a coon."

"That's whar the hitch comes in. It happened to be a wild cat instead, and she was thirstin' fur blood afore she struck the airth. I didn't hev to go fur to find her. When she lit on me I thought I'd bumped up agin a travelin' buzz-saw. She landed on this right shoulder, fastened her teeth in the cloth and flesh, and then worked away with all four feet. She seemed to be all over me at once, bitin', spittin', growlin' and crawlin', and I was a licked man inside of twenty seconds. I s'pose I yelled and fit back, but I could never remember."

"How did it end?"

"Jest at daylight I cum to and found myself lyin' on the ground and as badly used up as if I'd been run through a threshin' masheen. I got to brother John's mostly by crawlin' on my hands and knees, and the sight nearly scart me to death. I had on a coat collar, a piece of shirt and my boots, but that was about all. That critter had scratched and clawed me naked and then continued bizness. I forgit how many thousand teeth and claw marks I'm carryin' to the grave, but I know I was in bed fur six weeks and didn't feel real pert for a year. I s'pose the varmint thought she'd finish me or she'd hev hung on a leetle longer. That's the story and I don't want nuthin' said about experience bein' a dear teacher. I've never looked fur coons since that night. If I should see seven of 'em roostin' side by side on a limb and coon skins was wuth ten dollars apiece, they might continer to roost and be hanged to 'em, fur all me. I got my money's wuth and don't want any more."—Detroit Free Press.

THE FOX AND BADGER.

Strange and Contradictory Experiences of the English Hunter.

The fox noses the rabbits out at times and scratches them out. As to the badger, what could be more delicate for his very accommodating appetite than tender young rabbits? They put flesh on to his ribs after his fast—often a long and compulsory one—in winter. So he digs for them in a business-like manner, just like a mole. He knows where they are exactly—his nose tells him that—and in less than two minutes the fore part of him is buried; all you will see will be his hind legs working vigorously and a lot of earth moving. But he gets his rabbits. Hungry stomachs are hard to reason with. The badger is, I know, as a rule, nocturnal in his habits; so is a fox; but where the places that they frequent are quiet and secluded they will at times hunt by day for their food. A vixen and her mate at times reverse the order of things; like humans, woodland wild creatures are governed by circumstances.

I have at different times met with the fox and the badger in spots where I certainly did not expect to see them; and when I have gone where, according to my reckoning, they ought to have been—so far as locality could be relied on—they were not there. Very contradictory experiences one has in looking for wild things.—Blackwood's Magazine.

—Advertise in the GAZETTE.

—Green and Co. pays cash for butter and eggs.

—If you want brick go to John Coolen's.

—This number of the GAZETTE completes the fifth volume.

—The M. E. Ladies' Aid Society met with Mrs C. M. Johnson on Friday afternoon.

—Subscribe for the GAZETTE this week and commence with No. 1, Vol. VI. $1.00 per year.

—Some very fine grapes have been marketed here this week by parties living on Lake Minnetonka.

—Rev. Davis, of Buffalo, conducted the funeral services of little Joe Davies at the M. E. church, this forenoon.

—Pension Agent Baker was in town today taking another set of affidavits in the Frank Stoltz' pension matter.

—On Friday afternoon Mr. Covall had a runaway on the west side of the river and received a severe wound of the scalp.

—Rev. Frank R. Millspaugh will hold Episcopal services at the Presbyterian church on Monday evening at 7:30. All are invited.

--Rev Hughes who was to preach in the Presbyterian church last Sabbath did not come. Charles S. Hawker read a sermon in his stead, which was well received.

—Butternuts are uncommonly plenty this year, and quite a lot of them have been gathered by our citizens. One thing you can find at almost any house is butternuts.

—The railroad which has in the past been known as the "Sault ste Marie" will hereafter be called the "Soo-Pacific" having completed arrangements for through trains to the coast.

—A fine yoke of oxen were watered at the town pump on Saturday, reminding some of our citizens of old times when oxen furnished the principal means of moving freight and passengers in these big woods.

—Delano's village council don't set a very good example for her citizens to employ home talent, when it goes to Buffalo to hire a lawyer to open streets when there are three at home. Or are our legal lights too busy to attend to such small cases?

—The Eagle true to her principles flops about wonderfully trying to justify the village council for paying out village money to help hire a teacher for the band "law or no law-" She can flutter and flop all she pleases but that don't make it right.

—Several farms have changed hands lately. Money that has been pulled out of the banks and been kept out of circulation drawing no interest, is being invested in real estate, and consequently farm land bids fair to command better prices than it was able to for the past several years.

--There has been talk of circulating a petition to be presented to the village council requesting them to establish a street car line from the Minneapolis road near J. D. Young's farm residence, to L. M. Maxfield's residence, on Third street. It could be continued on around to River street, past the mill dam, to the place of starting, thereby saving the cost of a couple of turn tables. Who says Delano is not booming?

—The ladies of the M. E. Aid Society met at the home of Mrs. Jonas Johnson on Friday last, reorganized and elected the following officers for three months: President, Mrs. H. Wilder; vice-president, Miss Julia Cunningham; secretary, Miss Hattie Gross; treasurer, Mrs. J. J. Cameron. A Juvenile Aid Society was also organized, and elected Miss Addie Cameron president, Mrs. C. H. Green vice-president, Miss Hattie Gross, secretary, and Miss Annie Maxfield treasurer.

—Old papers for sale at this office.

--Brick $8 per 1000 at John Coolen's.

—If you need lime, call on John Coolen. 27.

—Wm. Ziebarth on Wednesday morning received a dispatch from his son Albert W., at Fort Assinneboine, Mont., saying that it is a boy and weighs nine pounds.

—William Murphy we are told sold his farm in Hennepin county consisting of 170 acres for $25 per acre. He has bargained for the old homestead in Franklin and has moved on to it.

--Letters have been received by several of our citizens from Albert Peterson a former Delano boy, which were written in August and only came here last week. Albert is in Alaska where at one time he was alone with the natives sick for quite awhile, but has recovered. He says occasionally missionaries come around and talked to the natives for a short time and charge them five or ten dollars which he thinks has a poor effect on the natives.

--The Great Northern R. R. commenced soon after the appearance of last week's Eagle to tear up its track along in front of that bird's nest, at Third street crossing, and some of our citizens may have thought it some of Jim Hill's "spite work" but before they got through they put in some new ties and fixed the road bed in better shape than before. Probably the most substantial part of the G. N. is the few rods in front of the "Eagle's aerie."

County Fair.

We took occasion to visit the fair at Howard Lake on Thursday, and found a fair display in some lines, rather slim in others. There was a great deal too much gambling going on to suit some, others seemed to enjoy being fleeced out of their hard earned dimes. The weather was fine, and in the afternoon the crowd was large. The exhibit of horses was good. Johnston Mealey carrying off his share of prizes. Cokato took first prize for several noble equines. We saw one half-miie trotting heat and John Tracy's horse, of Cokato took that, Mr. Dewees, of Howard, with Gray Bess, second. In a mile running race George Allen's thoroughbred, from Monticello, made a very fine run for half a mile and after passing the stand and looking back his rider concluded to haul him up, seeing no competitors, who were left behind the stand, after he discovered that they were coming he headed his horse for another round and won the race easily.

The cattle show was very small. One black hog must have taken the prize as it was the only one we saw. Several pens of sheep were on exhibition. The poultry show was good. The balloon assencion which took place the day before all joined in pronouncing a first class exhibition of the kind, and many waited to see it repeated this evening. Politicians, old and new were on the grounds in great abundance. J. D. Crandall, of Rockford, gate keeper, succeeded in keeping out those who had no tickets, in fine style.

Chicago, Seattle and the World's Fair.

October 1st through sleeping car service will be inaugurated over the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul and Great Northern Railways. Cars leaving Chicago every evening and Seattle every morning and running through without change. For further particulars or information about trips to any par of the country see Agent Geo. Bolton. Now is the time to visit the World's Fair. Its like was never seen before and probably never will be again.

Snow fell to the depth of several inches in England on the day following the defeat of the Irish home rule bill by the house of lords. If the American senate defeats the the silver coinage repeal bill, snow will fall so deep that a majority of the senators will never again be heard from.—Globe.

Col. Ingersoll has finally come to the conclusion that the parliament of religions at Chicago will exercise a widespread influence in bringing about the common brotherhood of man. The Colonel may be right, as both he and his doctrines were conspicuous by their absence from the deliberations.—Globe.

A letter has been received by the democratic county committee from Hon. M. R. Baldwin stating that he would recommend the nominee of the meeting of last Saturday week for appointment to the postmastership of Aitkin. As the major had promised to do so in advance, and as his word is his bond, the Age was certain of his action in the matter, and congratulates Mr. Wilber upon his success.—Aitkin Age.

The trainmen on the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railway have been armed with improved shotguns capable of throwing half a dozen slugs through a half-inch iron plate, which are designed for use upon train robbers. A robber who faces one of these guns will never again have any ambition to pursue his calling, and the remedy will, if generally applied, prove a complete and effectual cure for the disease.—Globe.

Hon. R. C. Dunn's newspaper law, which was enacted by the legislature last winter, defines a legal newspaper as being one consisting of four pages of five columns or more to each page. It doesen't say four pages or more, but just four pages. As Bob Dunn's own paper, the Princeton Union, is an eight page paper, it looks as if Bob had made it impossible for his own paper to be qualified in its present form to give official publication to legal notices of any kind.—Brainerd Journal.

Hall Invited to Speak.

Washington, Sept. 25.--Representative Hall has received a cordial invitation from the Ohio democratic campaign committee to stump Ohio during Neal's gubernatorial canvas. It is very likely he will accept and make some rousing democratic speeches.—Minneapolis Times.

Englishmen Buy Chicago Saloons.

London, Sept. 25.—At a meeting today of the mortgage debenture holders of the Chicago brewers, the company was authorized to raise $250,000 by 6 per cent bonds guaranteed by the American company, for the purchase of saloons in Chicago, so the company could not be interfered with by outside brewries.—Minneapolis Times.

Gave the Indians Liquor.

Pipestone, Minn., Sept. 26.—While Supt. C. J. Crandall was away last week after more students for the Indian school here, some fellows who were on a spree gave two scholars of that institution liquor. Marshal Walkup is at Hardwick today after one John Cummings, a warrant having been sworn out against him for giving one of the boys liquor. It is said that others will soon be arrested. The penalty is $300 each or two years in the penitentiary.—Minneapolis Journal.

Upholstered tourist cars in charge of porter and equipped with bedding, curtains, linen, ranges and all conveniences form an important part of the Great Northern Railway through train between St. Paul and Seattle. DIED.

PATRZIK—On Saturday, Sept 23, in Delano, Peter Patrzik, age about 30 years.

DAVIES—In Delano, on Wednesday, Sept. 27, Joseph, infant son of Rev. and Mrs. Joseph R. Davies.

The following lines were sent by a distant friend, on hearing of the birth of a son, to Rev. and Mrs. Joseph R. Davies. Since they were received the little one has been called home to his God, leaving the home he had helped make happy in sorrow and tears. Another reminder of the uncertainty of life here. His parents are not without hope of meeting little Joe on the shining shore.

AT LAST!

Of wedded life I've had a taste,
Its ups and downs and all,
A married man I must confess
I've been three years this fall.
All wedding towers are at an end
And honey moon is past,
We've something else to 'tend to now
A daddy I am at last!

Cho: I'm now called father, pa and pa,
And dad too's at me cast,
I own the corn and say to all
A daddy I am at last!

My baby is a healthy boy
And weighs nine pounds about,
He's fat as butter, so he is,
Without the least of doubt.
He owns a healthy pair of lungs
And shows it by a blast
Of noisy yells and crying spells,
But I'm a dad at last!

Cho:

He has blue eyes and dimple chin
And such a mouth for pap,
You'd laugh to see the face he makes
When forced upon my lap,
My mother-in-law puts in her lip,
And gives me such a blast
For pinching him to make him cry,
But I'm a dad at last.

Cho:

Well this isn't all but I guess this much will do, so good bye once more.

Yours for a little nonsense,
MRS. J.

Notice.

All parties knowing themselves to be owing me on book account and notes past due are requested to call and pay up, and save cost of collections. As the conditions of trade with the manufacturers are such that I must have the money to meet my bills.

HOW A PUZZLE WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

CORN-HUSKING TIME.

The fields are filled with a smoky haze,
The golden spears
Of the ripening ears
Peep from the crested and pennoned maize.
All down the rustling rows are rolled
The portly pumpkins, green and gold.
Altogether
'Tis very fine weather
Just as the almanac foretold.

* * * * * *

All day we cut and bind; till at night,
Where a field of corn in
The misty morning
Waved, in the level September light,
All over the shadowy stubble land,
The stock, like Indian wigwams, stand,
Compact and secure,
There leave them to cure,
Till the merry husking time is at hand.

Then the fodder will be to stack and to house,
And the ears to husk
But now the dusk
Falls soft as the shadows of cool pine boughs;
Our good day's work is done; the night
Brings wholesome fatigue and appetite;
Up comes the balloon
Of the huge red moon,
And home we go, singing gay songs by its light.

THE M. E. Conference in session at Minneapolis this week expressed itself as opposed to the Geary exclusion of Chinese law.

FRIDAY, Oct. 13, will be Minnesota day at the World's Fair. A general invitation is extended to all to be present. Gov. Nelson, S. M. Owen, Cyrus Northrop and others will speak.

SOME of the papers are howling that President Cleveland in a recent speech saught to influence Senators in their vote on the Voorhees repeal bill. We would like to know what that Republican Silver Senator was up to when he cornered the President up and informed him that the repeal bill would not pass because there were twenty filli-bustering Senators himself being one of them, prepared to keep it from so doing.

PEOPLE are getting anxious to know why the Democratic, Senate and President don't pass a law to suit them. If it is necessary to compromise with every faction and trade off what people want, in order to repeal one Republican act which was itself a compromise; if it is necessary to settle the tariff, temperance, greenback, ownership of railroads, and all other questions by trading votes before one vote can be taken with the Democratic majority in the U. S. Senate it is about time to abolish that honorable body. But this is what comes of the little pitiable political practices of pot-house politians right at home. The evils at the fountain spread out and become more plain to be seen at the mouth of the stream.

Democracy Unalloyed.

The time to talk politics is now; more than a year before an eleetion and nearly a year after one, except for township, village and school officers. In the heat of a political campaign voters are slow to believe what they have not previously heard about, and their time is too limited to investigate what is new to them, or not thoroughly understood, consequently they may become very undecided as to what is best to do, or as to who or what they wish to vote for, and become, through their negligence to acquaint themselves with the fundmental principles upon which the several political parties are founded a part of the so-called floating vote; an exceedingly unknown quantity just before every election, and, lay themselves liable to the charge of being misled, if they are not actually persuaded to vote against their own best interests.

Now is the time for each voter to post himself; to secure an encyclopedia, a political almanac, or other useful books, and find out from an unbiased and non-partizan standpoint where he desires to stand on all the live questions of the day. He should, also, take one or more of the county newspapers and a first class city weekly and know of men as well as of measures, and then when voting time comes he will be ready to exercise his soverign right, in that fearless and independent though humble manner so becoming in a truly patriotic citizen of a great Republic which had its birth in such trying times, and under such circumstances as needs but mentioning to cause every American citizen to firmly resolve to do his best to uphold that Goyernment in all its purity.

THE REPUBLIC.

All kinds of people does it take
With many minds, of different kinds,
A great, grand republic to make.

Wer'e held together by what you'd think,
It may seem queer, we have them here,
Would make the proudest nation sink.

The A. P. A. will tell you square
"You must not pick a Catholic
For any office. Now beware!"

The Prohi says, and means it, too,
"Don't cast your vote for any bloat,
But stick up for Temperance, true."

The Populist would all control
"With money enough, good pure stuff
And faith, and flat, a handsome roll."

The G. O. P. is for "protection."
"Our indus-tries," she lustily cries
Along before an election.

For "equal rights" are Democrats.
"Justice to all, whate're befall,"
And "good sound coin" they swing their hats.

DELANO, Minn., Oct. 5. 1893.

S. M. Owen at Maple Lake.

On Tuesday Hon. S. M. Owen addressed a Populists meeting at Maple Lake. Although the weather was fine the roads were muddy and together with the fact that the meeting was not thoroughly advertised, few believing that Mr. Owen was to be present, he was greeted with a small but very attentive audience, which he succeeded in interesting for about two hours and a half, and said if he should talk a week he would not be done as he was plum full of his subject. He considered the slavery question as nothing as to this in dangers to the republic that now threaten. History teaches that more people have lost their liberties during times of peace than in war. The secret foe that stabs you in the back the most to be feared. This is a republic; you cannot delegate your powers to others with any safety. If you are not true to your trust you will go down. It is the republic that is likely to fall. Scarcely one republic has lived beyond a hundred years. All die young, we must see to ours. Agriculturists possessed one-half the wealth of the country in 1860. Wealth was as equally distributed as could be. From '50 to '60 agriculturists gained 50 per cent, the same as others in the land. From '60 to '70 only 40 per cent. From '70 to '80 only 9 per cent. From '80 to '90 don't yet know, them fellows at Washington are so slow with the last census, but don't believe it is over 3 per cent. There must surely be some cause for agricultural interests falling behind other industries. How much easier it is now for farmers with their labor saving machinery to earn wealth and yet they fall behind. Primarily you produced the wealth, now own but one-fifth. You should think about the causes. I have thought and can see causes that reduced your wealth from one-half to one fifth of the whole. Inequalities in taxation. Protective tariff has got in its deadly work all along the line. Financial questions. During the war it was discovered that money could be voted to privileged classes, as the whisky tax of $2 per gallon, which was to take effect in nine months, warning all distilleries to make all they could for that length of time, which they did and grew rich. The late raise on tin to take effect in nine months is another example.

One twentieth of one per cent of our citizens own over one-half the property in this country today. Manipulating the great war debt $3,000,000,000 brought depression to farming and other industries. Greed saw that people could pay it too easily with money based on the faith of the people, and converted the non-interest bearing debt into an interest bearing debt. The agricultural interests struck the toboggin slide right there. They refused to make money good for all debt. Gold went up as a fact. We might think this enough, but not so; in 1869 came the public strengthing act, passed to make bonds payable in coin, gold or silver, which had been used for two thousand years, adding $680,000,000 to the debt. In 1873 demonetization of silver followed making the bonds payable in gold alone. What followed? I think as little of this as of tariff.

What does demonetization of silver mean? It means that we had a mass of metal, gold and silver, nearly equal, which was used to settle the balance of trade between countries, the individuals of different countries; countries do not trade, individuals do.

One time governments had no credit, we had to have something stable. Can now get along without them when nations are stable. By demonetizing silver one-half our currency was taken from us, gone, cut in two.

When we talk about depreciation of wheat, steers, etc., etc., we mean appreciation of gold. A dollar may buy more to-day than ever before, but it costs more to get the dollar. Business men suffer too, but they won't listen; they don't know it.

Men who own wealth, loan money, gain by having money scarce. Demonitization helps them.

It is a fiction that coin must be the base. We want no better money than the faith and credit of of our nation.

Industries of our country we must protect and foster. I protest against a contraction of currency. The entire range of ratio between gold and silver for 251 years has been 1 to 14.94 to 1 to 16.95. Did you ever hear about it until now, lately? When paid mouthpieces try to scare you. I want to see the Sherman law repealed, but want silver where it was in 1873. England draws $500,000,000 in interest from other nations each year.

Brazil has paper money, no coin, is a prosperous nation. We could have money based on our inexhaustible resources, wheat, cotton, mines, forests. The press was then roasted for being so one-sided on the silver question.

The political power of corporate monopoly must be put down. There will be a new reform party. Neither of the old parties can remedy matters. The speaker advocates the Government owning one line of railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific and claims this would give the government control of the busines.

Mr. Owen is to speak at Cokato Saturday November 4.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 29, 1893.

Senators Voorhees, Gorman and Palmer, at different times this week took occasion to defend President Cleveland from the newspaper charge, which Senator Stewart mistakenly dignified by reading in the Senate, of attempting by the use of patronage to control the legislative branch of the government. Of course everybody in Washington knows as well as these three Senators do that President Cleveland needs no defense, but there may be people elsewhere who are liable to to be misled by constant reiteration of the charge. When Senator Palmer told Senator Stewart that if he would name one Senator who had been controlled by the President through Patronage he would gladly join him in getting a resolution passed providing for an investigation. Senator Stewart did not name a Senator. Why? Simply because he knew of none. Senator Gorman's few remarks on the subject covered the case fully. He said: "I am not the mouthpiece of the President. His patronage I know nothing of or care nothing for. I neither have it nor want it. No President has ever been so careful to avoid the appearance of distributing patronage for his own ends. He has scarcely done his party justice."

Everybody has heard of that frequently mentioned article, "Senatorial courtesy," but with all due respect to the eminent and dignified gentlemen who compose the U. S. Senate it must be said that "Senatorial discourtesy" more truly applies to the numerous "tifs" between Senators which have been such features of the debate this week. Space forbids their enumeration, but one specimen will give a general idea of all of them. Senator Wolcott referred to Senators Gorman and Aldrich as steerers of the Senators who favor the Voorhees repeal bill, and told of their having decided to begin next week holding twelve-hour sessions of the Senate. Senator Gorman in reply said: "This is the first time that I have ever known a Senator or his agents to listen at the committee room doors to tell the Senate of the private conferences of Senators on any subject whatever."

The ultimate fate of the Voorhees bill is still very much in doubt. Clothure is a two-edged weapon, and although its present adoption would be of great benefit to the democratic party it is not probable that Senator Platt's resolution will even be reported back from the committee on Rules, to which it was referred, and without clothure there is small probability that the bill will ever be voted upon without the consent of its opponents. Can that consent be obtained? That is a question that only the future can answer, but Senators have confidence that it will be obtained through a movement now on foot among democratic Senators who favor the bill. This movement contemplates getting the consent of the opponents of the bill to the taking of a vote in exchange for the promise of enough votes to make the passage of a silver bill, something on the order of Senator Faulkners proposed amendment to the Voorhees bill, a certainty immediately after the Voorhees bill is passed.

The house began the debate on the Tucker bill for the repeal of the federal election laws according to program, and so far it has been conducted upon Constitutional grounds, although it may get down to partizanship any hour. Although it will not alter or postpone the result, the order under which the House is acting making Oct. 9 the last day of the debate, the absence af a quorum of democrats at times is enough to aggravate the party leaders and to justify the adoption of a proposition which has been made, to keep a record of the absentees and to see that their constituents are informed through the party papers in their districts of every day's absence without leave. This would be troublesome to the Congressmen, and just to their constitutents.

The House committee on Banking and Currency after mature deliberation decided that more information should be obtained by the committee before it reported any financial blll to the House. In accordance with that decision the committee has given Representative Oates a hearing on his bill for the repeal of the tax and the state bank currency and has listened to an argument by Representative McLaurin in favor of his proposition to issue $125,000,000 in greenbacks to increase the currency in circulation. The chairman of the committee has been requested to obtain as much information as possible from the various State governments on the subject of State banks.

The sensational statements concerning the nomination of Mr. J. J. Van Alen to be Ambassador to Italy will doubtless be investigated by the Senate committee on Foreign Relations before his nomination is acted upon. No one believes that either President Cleveland or ex-Secretary Whitney was a party to any promise made to give Mr. Van Alen this positon because of his having made a large campaign contributution, and an investigation will probably show that no such promise was made by anybody.

Tender Hearted Congressmen.

ST. MICHAELS, Oct. 3.

EDITOR GAZETTE: Now the doctors at Washington are hard at work to cure the body politic of its financial ills. To me it looks like quackery. Suppose a man had a cancerous sore, would you as a medical man plaster that sore to alleviate the man's pain or would you take your surgical instruments to cut it out, or, if not that, at least cauterize it. Of course the knife or caustic would pain the man exceedingly, but I think there might be a chance to cure him.

Congress, it seems would apply a plaster. To effect a cure of our financial sickness they would have to go for the drones that are getting enormously rich from the labor of the producing classes. But then Wall street would howl, the railroad magnates and protected manufacturers would join the bankers, they would feel hurt in the pocket-books, and our Congressmen are so tender hearted they can't hurt anybody, besides the laboring people have no lobby in Washington, so it may be presumed that they are satisfied with things as they are. And think of the oyster suppers and other good things (not to say ready cash) to be had from the above mentioned bankers, railroad magnates and manufacturers. "The public be d——d" said Vanderbilt, and it seems that the Congressmen are thinking so if they don't say it.

Yours,
M. JAEB.

The "Captive" Provinces.

Alsace and Loraine are to be "assimulated" with the remainder of the German Empire. A Berlin cable reports that Chancellor Von Caprivi has formulated a plan for this, which has been approved by the Kaiser. Ever since these two provinces were wrested from France, 22 years ago, they have formed one of the states of the empire and since 1879 they have been governed by a stadtholdet as a representative of the emperor, and have had a provincial ministry and legislature of their own to deal with local matters.

Now it is proposed to separate the two provinces. Alsace is to be incorporated with its eastern neighbor, the grand duchy of Baden, and Lorraine is to form part of the kingdom of Prussia. If the programme is carried out Baden will have an area of somewhat over 9,000 square miles and a population af 2,750,000. This will raise the grand duchy to the third place among German states, putting her above the kingdom of Wurtemberg.

This project will stir the excitable French people up to the pitch of frenzy. This absorption of the two provinces into Baden and Prussia respectively will be formal notice to France that Germany does not propose to yield her conquest. A wave of patriotic feeling will sweep over the French Republic, and the war-cry, "Revenche!" will again resound from the English channel to the Mediterranean. Perhaps Germany is hoping to stir the French up to the point of going to war. Who knows?—Toledo Blade.

NEW YORK, Oct. 5—Baffled by light winds, the yachts Vigilant and Valkyrie, which started today on the first of the international races for the Americas cup, were compelled to abandon the contest. It was just 5:10 o'clock in the afternoon when a tug took the Valkyrie in tow and the dismal tooting of whistles announced the failure of the day's sport. The English cutter was a mile in advance of the Vigilant, and the points from which they had srarted almost six hours before was yet miles away.—Daily Globe.

A Good One on Gov. Gid.

G. S. Ives returned from Milwaukee last Saturday night. During his visit to Milwaukee he happened to visit the soldiers home and there met with an incident that was a trifle funny. He noticed a man wearing a badge which he thought seemed familiar to him as it very much resembled his army corps badge. He accosted the stranger with a good morning comrade, and pointing to the badge said, I was in that one myself. This bred a familiarity for a moment but didn't last long when Gid discovered that the badge was that of the Keely Institute, and that the wearer was an ex-inebrate instead of an ex-soldier.—St, Peter Herald.

One cattle car was demolished and several head of cattle killed, one of which was forced through the top of the car and fell to the ground beneath the bridge. The second edition of The Cosmopolitan for September brought the total edition up to 211,000 copies, without doubt the largest edition of any magazine in the world for this month. It remained for The Cosmopolitan to have the World's Fair treated in a single number by twelve different writers. As the exposition of 1893 must remain one of the leading events in the history of the United States, the most distinguished men were asked to prepare this magazing volume, which is destined to become valuable as one of the most perfect descriptions of the World's Fair. Among the number of those who contribute are our only ex-president, Walter Besant, the most distinguished of the English literary men who visited the exposition, and a host of others. Besides the usual fiction, including a story by Mark Twain, entitled, "Is He Living or is He Dead," and the regular departments, The Cosmopolitan contains nearly one hundred illustrations devoted to the World's Fair, including eleven full pages. It is pronounced one of the most remarkable of the publications yet issued regarding the Fair. It is a completely illustrated guide or souvenir, as one prefers to call it, by the most famous writers of the day, put before the reader at the price of 12½ cents, and more than the equal of the books of the Fair which sell for 75 cents and one dollar. 52-1

FROM Boston comes the news that an aged spinster named Mary Wales has departed this life, leaving $8,000 to her cat Otto. Thus more currency is locked up from circulation.

A HOBOKEN woman's husband remarked testily that he "wouldn't give two cents for her way of cooking," and she has made it the basis of a suit for divorce. Some women are entirely two cents-ative.

THE Boston Globe has been asking many actors and singers the question "What makes a song popular?" and prints several columns of replies. It may not be relevant to the inquiry, but we can assure our contemporary that what makes most songs unpopular is the singing of them.

"I WISH you would state in the most emphatic language," said the Brazilian minister to a Washington reporter the other day, "that whatever may be the result of the present trouble, there is one thing certain—that Brazil will remain a republic and her institutions will not suffer."

By the doctrine of averages we ought to have few disasters and easy times in the financial world for several years to come. The calamity list by land and sea has kept pace with the disaster record in commerce, finance and industry, and both have been abnormally large during the year 1893.

TO THE average American woman it is rather startling to hear Brigham Young's first wife described as a gentle woman, with face free from care, and kindly gray eyes. She is now seventy-two years old, and is gracious and dignified in her manner. This must prove that Mrs. Young No. 1 never knew the meaning of jealousy.

A TENNESSEE genius has invented an electrical appliance that will convert a train robber into a disfigured corpse the moment he attempts to enter the express car. It requires considerable attention on the part of the express messenger, and the chances are that a man who could run the electrical train robber annihilator could pump a Winchester with equally satisfactory results.

A FEW years ago women had a small show to acquire a classical education. Conditions have all changed. Not only are the great institutions of the land throwing wide open their doors to the sex, but a generous public has in the last few years endowed women's colleges with over eleven million dollars. That the coming rivalry for literary honors will be healthful none can doubt.

HARRY MINER, the founder of that branch of industry known as the "green goods" business, or, in plainer words, the confidence game, died at Bensonhurst, L. I., September 13, penniless. At the time of his death he was a police officer at a salary of $60 a month. Miner, during his career, spent several fortunes, all gained in his nefarious business. He died without a friend at his bedside.

THE report comes from Boston that Mr. Garner has sent a letter to a philanthropist there asking contributions for the African monkeys in the shape of rattles, balls, tin trumpets and other small toys, including dolls. It is well to begin the culture of the simian mind on this rather low plane, but in time—what may we not expect? A Gorilla club monkeying with the Browning buzzsaw—is it too much to hope?

WHEN Senator Perkins was a youngster in California, friendless, and with only two dollars in his pocket, a Mr. Knight, a merchant, gave him a situation as porter, where he could earn regular wages, $40 a month. He never forgot the kindness. When he had made a place for himself in the business world he sent for his old employer, who had in the meantime met with misfortune, and gave him a bookkeeper's place in his office worth $175 a month.

IT is one of the greatest mistakes of people of moderate means to make their little girls up into young ladies before they are half-grown. Childhood and girlhood are too desirable to fritter away in a medley of clothes, fussiness, ceremony and worry about personal appearance. The time spent on such things is much better used if given to study, the improvement of the mind and the care of the body, with exercise and amusement to keep them in healthy condition.

ONE of the English newspapers got excited over the management, or, as it asserted, mismanagement of the Mile End Workhouse. One of the leading items of the list of charges was that the corsets which were supplied to the "lady paupers" were bought for 2s 6d a dozen, or about 5 cents each. Investigation, however, proved that the lady paupers had not been subjected to the indignity of wearing 5-cent corsets as their only visible support, for the management conclusively proved that they had furnished a luxurious article costing over 35 cents. Upon this journalistic wrath was appeased.

IT would be a good thing if the government exercised over railroad employes the same supervision that it maintains over men engaged in the steamboat service. No accident occurs on the rivers or the great lakes without being made the subject of investigation by government inspectors. The captain, the mate or the engineer who is found guilty of carelessness or negligence suffers by the revocation of his license, and this warns others that eternal vigilance only will enable them to pursue their chosen callings. A similar system applied to the railroads would soon reduce the number of wrecks.

UNITED STATES Columbian postage stamps are in demand by philatelists all over the world. The stamps are issued in the denominations of 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 10, 15, 30 and 50 cents, and $1, $2, $3, $4 and $5. It costs $16.26 to purchase a complete set, but such purchases are frequently made by collectors or their agents. It is easy for persons in this country to obtain stamps of the smaller denominations. It is difficult, however, to obtain those of the larger denominations unless they are purchased from the government, and it is said that when canceled they may be sold for 75 per cent. of their original cost.

FLOODS IN THE SOUTH.

A Furious Gale from the Gulf Inundates the City of Mobile, Causing Great Damage—High Wind at New Orleans Wrecks Buildings and Destroys Plantations.

MOBILE, Ala., Oct. 4.—A southeast gale broke here Monday morning about 4 o'clock, and the wind, blowing at least 50 miles an hour, sent the water in from the gulf until the river reached Royal street, which is four blocks from the river and at an elevation of about 15 feet from the river level. All the wholesale and a portion of the retail district of the city is some 4 feet under water and thousands of dollars' worth of goods have been damaged.

The pilot boat Ida Low was driven on the wharf at the foot of St. Francis street. The bay boat Heroine was driven on the Mobile & Ohio wharf and almost totally wrecked. The Crescent City, another bay boat, left Point Clear at the same time the Heroine did in the morning and has not since been heard from. It is reported that three dredges working on the channel have been lost. It is also reported here that some 50 miles of the Louisville & Nashville railroad along the coast are under water and that the Biloxi bridge has been swept away by the gale. Nothing has been heard from the gardeners in the marshes east of the city and the worst is feared.

In this city houses have been unroofed, trees blown down and one cotton warehouse has succumbed to the fury of the gale. All the smokestacks of all the manufacturing industries have been blown down. Street car traffic has been totally suspended because of the damage to the electric wires and the city will no doubt be in darkness, as the waves are fast encroaching on the electric works. The busiest thoroughfares of the city are being navigated in boats and persons are now wading up to their armpits in order to save goods. It is now conceded by all to be the worst storm that has ever visited Mobile.

The southern part of the city presents a scene of wreckage as if it had been bombarded. The towers on the courthouse and Christ church are tottering. Dredge No. 5 turned over near the lighthouse and three men were thrown into the angry waves. At great peril the crew of the tug Capt. Sam steamed to the rescue and saved two of the men, the other being lost. An unknown white man lost his footing while wading from the Union depot at the foot of government stand and was swept under the bridge and drowned.

The storm reached its height about 1 o'clock p. m., when the wind reached a velocity of 75 miles an hour. From that hour the fury of the gale began to increase and the wind gradually changed from southeast to west. The rain has been falling in torrents the entire day, and the city is in darkness and there is not an electric light of any kind burning.

Nearly every bathhouse along the western shore was blown down, and at Morgan's an attendant named Graham was swept away with five bathhouses and drowned. The Magnolia and Cooley's warehouses were blown down, and two unknown negroes were drowned in the cotton yard. Magnificent oaks all over the city are laid low, and the earth is covered with the green leaves whipped from the trees by the fierce winds Houses all over the city have been unroofed and fences blown down.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 4.—A very high windstorm, amounting to almost a cyclone, visited this city late Sunday night, doing great damage to telegraph and telephone wires and causing considerable loss by blowing off tiles, etc. Patrolman Ulrick Bauer was struck and killed by falling bricks from an office building at the corner of Tchoupetoulas street. No further loss of life is reported.

The Louisville & Nashville suffered the most disastrous washout in the history of the road. The line is impassable east of Chefmenteur, 18 miles from New Orleans, for a distance of 15 miles, and from the statements of the trainmen it is learned that the entire line to Mobile has suffered more or less. Two bridges are reported down—one at Bay St. Louis, Miss., and one at Biloxi, Miss.—and traffic is entirely suspended. Miles of telegraph lines along the road are down and communication has not yet been reestablished.

Reports of a serious accident have been received from Point La Hache and vicinity. The steeple of the courthouse and the steeple of the Catholic church were blown down. Several houses were wrecked and it is said that four persons were killed. Almost every plantation on the lower coast has suffered.

It is reported that three children were killed in one of the little settlements below Magnolia plantation. Every stick of sugar cane is down, but may not be much damaged, as the cane is liable to recover from the blow. Gov. Warmoth said that this storm was the worst experienced since 1811. The hurricane of 1888 was not half so violent and destructive.

RIO AGAIN SHELLED.

The Rebel Fleet Again Bombards the Brazilian Capital—Great Loss of Life Reported—Citizens Panic-Stricken.

LONDON, Oct. 4.—The Brazilian rebel fleet again bombarded Rio Janeiro according to a dispatch received by a leading banking house here. The dispatch says that many lives were lost and an immense amount of damage done. The residents of Rio, who for many days have been living in dread of such an assault, were panic-stricken when they heard the first shot fired and fled in confusion from one part of the city to another. The total damage cannot be ascertained from the dispatch, which is brief and does not go into details.

Panic Among the Inhabitants.

A dispatch received by the Exchange Telegraph company says that Admiral Mello reopened fire upon the forts defending the bay of Rio Janeiro. The dispatch adds that the bombardment continued without cessation throughout the day. Provisions in Rio Janeiro are selling at famine prices. Panic among the inhabitants again prevails.

The Brazilian legation in this city furnished the United Press the following information received in dispatches from the government at Rio Janeiro bearing date October 3:

The insurgent squadron under command of Admiral Mello is still in the bay of Rio Janeiro with its fighting elements weakened. Many of the members of the crews of the rebel warships are deserting daily. During the recent engagements between the land forces and the fleet the shore artillery damaged some of the rebel vessel. Two steamers that attempted to land insurgents at Santos and on the island of Santa Catharina were repulsed. The land forces are united and loyal to the government. Public opinion is wholly opposed to the insurgents.

The foreign ministers at Rio, the cable adds, backed up by the commanders of the foreign war vessels, have gone so far in the matter of protesting to De Mellos against further bombardment as diplomatic courtesy will permit. Every argument was brought to bear, not only on the insurgent admiral but on the government, to effect a peaceable settlement of the trouble, and avoid the daily increasing harrors of war at Rio. These friendly but vigorous efforts secured a delay last week of a few hours in the hostilities, but now, it seems, they have proved to be entirely without beneficial result, and shells will continue to spread death and devastation in the capital city until the stronger power triumphs. The capture of Desterro by the rebels has added greatly to their strength, and has made it possible for them to prolong operations indefinitely.

THREE WERE KILLED.

Another Fatal Accident on the Big Four Road in Ohio.

CINCINNATI, O., Oct. 4.—At 5:20 o'clock a. m. freight train No. 63 on the Big Four railroad ran into three loaded flat cars at Edgewood. The engine was lifted bodily from its trucks and the tender thrown down a 30-foot embankment. On the front of the first car in the train three tramps from Columbus were riding. They were pinned in the wreckage and two of them boiled to death by escaping steam. The other was fearfully crushed about the head and breast, and was taken from the debris only to die shortly afterward. The track was torn up for about 200 yards. The wreck train was summoned and the crew began the work of clearing the track. While prying a car off the rails a tie flew up and struck William Hobusch in the pit of the stomach. It is thought he is fatally injured.

The killed are:

Joe Jordan, a chairmaker of Columbus, O.; James Murphy, Columbus, foundry man; Joseph Blanch.

The injured:

Frank Brofferman, Van Wert, O., both legs broken; R. M. Hughes, operator at Edgewood, leg broken; William Hobusch, section hand, internally injured.

Superintendent Gibson, of the Big Four, places the blame on the switch engine crew. They had run three loaded cars on the main track and had gone back on the siding for more cars, thus trespassing on the fast freight's time.

The gold reserve stands at $93,582,172 and the net cash balance at $13,293,461, the total cash balance in the treasury, September 30, being $106,875,633, against $107,283,910 on the 31st of August.

FOUNTAIN CITY, Wis., Oct. 4.—John G. Hayes, of Winona, Minn., was drowned by the capsizing of a boat while trying to cross the Mississippi river.

MANY PERSONS HURT.

A Floor Gives Way at a Funeral in Wisconsin and 100 Persons Are Injured—Some of the Victims Are Seriously Wounded.

RIPON, Wis., Oct 3.—Many of the friends of the wife of Assemblyman Bow, who attended her funeral at the family residence in Kingston Saturday, were nearer to death than they imagined, for just as the services were beginning the floor gave way and fully 100 persons were precipitated into the cellar. Among the more seriously injured were the following:

Mary Jones, cut about the head; H. H. Perry, cut and bruised; Mrs. D. N. Pickett, arm broken; Mrs. Pugh, injured internally; Mrs. Vaughn, injured internally; Mrs. A. Vanberg, badly crushed and injured internally, will probably die.

The services took place in the main room of the house, which was erected many years ago. People crowded into the apartment, the men standing and some of the women occupying chairs. Just as the minister, standing near the casket, began to speak of the dead a cracking sound was heard. Before anyone realized the danger the floor gave way and minister and people went down with the broken beams and boards.

The disaster happened so quickly that none of those in the room had a chance to save themselves. Many lay motionless beneath the debris; others, who escaped serious injury, were so prostrated by fright as to be seemingly unable to move.

The mourners and others who occupied an adjoining room forgot their sorrow for the dead in their haste to aid the victims of the accident. It was a difficult task and at first it seemed as if most of them had received fatal hurts if they had not been killed outright. No entrance could be gained to the cellar from the outside, and it was necessary to climb down in the ruins to reach those who needed aid.

Finally some of the people in the cellar managed to extricate themselves from among the beams and flooring and lent their aid to the task of rescue. One after another the limp forms of the injured were dragged from beneath the ruins and carried over the debris to the open air, until the ground about the house looked like a field hospital. Covered with blood from numerous cuts and groaning from painful bruises the injured presented a most pitiful sight. As fast as possible an investigation of the extent of their hurts was made. This completed, it was found that while all were more or less bruised only one-third of the hundred who went down in the wreck had received serious injuries. One, Mrs. Vanberg, was so badly crushed and injured internally that she will die.

The house where the accident occurred was an old one, but the floors were thought to be of sufficient strength to sustain all the people who could stand upon them. The apartment, when the services began, was crowded to its utmost capacity. Only a small portion of those in the room were seated, and those who were standing took up every inch of room available. Even the doorways were filled with people, and the occupants of these places were the only ones in the apartment who escaped being precipitated into the cellar.

The casket containing the remains of Mrs. Bow stood in a room next to the one whose floor gave way. It was afterward taken to the cemetery and placed in the grave, only the members of the family being present.

THE SAME OLD STORY.

A Farmer Buys Green Goods and Gets a Wound as Well as Loss.

OAKLAND, Ill., Oct. 3.—Adolphus Jenkins, a prosperous farmer, went to Toledo and got what he supposed was $4,000 in counterfeit money for $600. He took the night train on the Cloverleaf for home, and when near Metcalf a stout, heavy-set man appeared to him and told him he was a detective and that he could consider himself under arrest. Jenkins jumped from the train. He received a severe contusion on the head, which it is thought will result in death. Upon examining the package of money it was found to contain a bundle of brown paper evenly cut, upon the top of which was a genuine dollar bill. It was later found out that the detective was a confederate of the green goods man, and he hoped to levy blackmail on Jenkins by releasing him after he was placed under arrest.

The crew of all the wrecked vessels were rescued without loss of life.

Favor the Chinamen.

OTTAWA, Ont., Oct. 3.—Several attempts have been made by labor organizations of the dominion to induce the government to impose further restrictions on Chinese immigration. The government has just passed an order in council which practically settles its policy in this regard. The order, after reciting the circumstances which called it forth, says:

"In view of the commercial relations of Canada with China it is not expedient to change the provisions of the Chinese immigration act nor to take any action that might be considered by the Chinese government as an invasion of the spirit of treaty obligations or as an unfriendly act."

MONEY IN INDIA.

What Becomes of a Vast Amount of Gold and Silver.

Between 1859 and 1889, thirty years, or half one lifetime, India has absorbed £117,000,000 in gold and £227,000,000 in silver, or £334,000,000 in all. What has become of the silver we do not exactly know, though it is certain that a great proportion of it is hoarded as fixed and visible wealth, but about the destination of the gold there is no doubt whatever. The people have kept the whole of it in their own hands, for it is not in circulation, and are using it either in ornaments, or kept, be it observed, to pawn in extremity, or as hoarded treasure in coin, such as lies under almost every peasant's floor in the Punjab and Eastern Bengal.

India is a treasure house of gold, yet a man may live fifty years in the British provinces and never see an ounce. The whole of this wealth, says Lord Roberts, with perfect justice, and especially the gold which represents obviously and necessarily part of the profit on the foreign trade, is due to security, and security is due to the presence of that army of 80,000 white men, which is so often represented as a burden on the Indian peasant.

It is a burden and a heavy one, but then it is a burden the endurance of which produces all by which the same peasant gains.—Spectator.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures

Mr. C. M. Heyer

"I was a boiler maker with W. & A. Fletcher Co.'s River Iron Works, this city, and at my business I contracted rheumatism so that I became a very great sufferer, and was really an invalid; helpless, could not move hands or feet, was unable to dress or undress myself. I had to have help to turn myself in bed. I did not work for four months, and was in a hospital for a long time. I spent a great deal of money without benefit. I asked the doctors if they could cure me, and they

Said They Could Not

One day a friend advised me to take a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla. When I had taken one bottle, I could get up, stand on my feet and walk through the rooms. I continued to take

LEVERTON'S LOVE.

How a Chain of Circumstances Restored His Sweetheart.

Leopold Leverton was in love once more! Ever since his quarrel with Laura Gray in the summer he had been paying desultory court to Dorothy Pearson, and now, hearing that Dollie had just inherited a sweet little legacy from a recently deceased maiden aunt, Leopold—or, as his friends were wont to style him, Poly—had come to the conclusion that her charms were utterly irresistible.

If Leopold did occasionally experience twinges of remorseful regret for the old delightful days he carefully concealed his feelings, and with all the impetuosity of his nature he resolved to beat George Speedman out of the running, win the fair Dollie—and her legacy—for his own and live happy ever after.

As Leopold sauntered through the town a happy thought struck him. He would send Mrs. Pearson a Christmas gift—something which would influence her to countenance the proposal he intended making to her daughter at the earliest opportunity.

What should the "something" be? A goose?

No. That might suggest odious comparisons.

A turkey?

Yes. That was the very thing; a turkey it should be!

He immediately proceeded to put his design into execution, and after examining a considerable number of these gobblers he finally selected a fine, fat fellow eminently qualified to arouse Mrs. Pearson's housewifely admiration and mellow the heart of her rotund little spouse.

"Just give me a scrap of paper and I'll write you the address to where I want it sent."

"Certainly, sir. Here you are, sir," and the shopkeeper handed Leopold a memorandum sheet.

Now, it happened that the poulterer's errand lad was one of those poetic souls who, in accordance with the eternal unfitness of things, are to be found in all parts of the civilized globe engaged in the most prosaic and uncongenial occupations, and he had in an idle moment inscribed upon the back of the slip of paper a line of Longfellow's which had taken his fancy. This inscription, however, escaped notice.

"That will do capitally," said Leverton, and he proceeded to write:

"No. 71 Trotterville terrace, Park road. With Leopold Leverton's compliments."

"There," said he, "that will do. I'll just pin it to the turkey. You will send it at once, won't you?"

"Immediately, sir," replied the tradesman, briskly. "No. 71 Park road, sir. Right, sir."

By a curious coincidence—or it may have been a fatality—George Speedman strolled leisurely up, unseen by Leopold, who walked off light-heartedly before him.

"No. 71 Park road!" said Speedman, mentally. "What's Poly been ordering for No. 71?"

He turned and looked into the shop.

"What does this weigh?" inquired George, indicating the one Leverton had just purchased and which still lay on the stall with the scrap of paper conspicuously attached.

"That one's sold, sir. Here's one that 'ud pass as twin brother to it."

"Ah," said George, perusing the lines which his rival had penned, "well, weigh me that one."

Oddly enough, the same happy thought had occurred to him which had been conceived by Leverton.

"Thank you, sir. Where shall I send it to?"

"Oh, I'll take it, thanks," replied Speedman. And straightway he trudged off to Park road with his burden.

There was a puzzled look on his face as he picked his way through the crowds of holiday makers that thronged the town and it was still there when, having left the shops and throngs behind him, he stopped for a moment to light a cigar.

Hardly had he proceeded a dozen yards along Park road, however, when the cloud suddenly lifted.

"By Jove! I have it!" he exclaimed aloud with a gesture of satisfaction, much to the surprise of a young lady who chanced to be passing him at that moment.

After relieving his feelings by the outburst just recorded George Speedman quickened his pace and a few minutes later was standing in the presence of the fair Dollie's maternal relative, presenting, with the most graceful and insinuating manner he could command, the unfortunate bird, which he relied upon to wing him into a favorable position for laying siege to the daughter's heart.

What his success was may readily be surmised from the fact that when, in response to Mrs. Pearson's invitation, he arrived later in the evening of the same day to dine with the family the good lady met him at the hall and whispered that Dollie was alone in the drawing-room.

George entered the room with a quickly beating heart, and what passed there is best known to Dollie and himself, but it is a significant fact that when, half an hour later, the young couple emerged in response to the summons of the dinner gong Dollie's cheeks were in hue like the deep heart of a crimson rose and there was an extremely long silken hair clinging to George's manly waistcoat.

Just prior to the announcement of dinner Leopold Leverton had arrived in a condition of pardonable anxiety as to the result of his stratagem.

It was doubtless very considerate of Mrs. Pearson to keep him engaged in conversation with herself in order that the privacy of the more fortunate gentleman, who had come to woo, might be uninvaded, but he was extremely perplexed and chagrined that Mrs. Pearson made no reference to the superb turkey.

"You will stay and take dinner with us, Mr. Leverton," She said, still without mentioning his gift. It was passing strange.

"Thank you," he responded musingly.

Then a terrible fear took possession of his heart. Had the dealer forgotten or omitted to send the bird? He could bear the suspense no longer.

"I—ah—did—you—ah—receive—a—a turkey this afternoon, Mrs. Pearson?" he stammered.

"Yes, indeed, and a fine one it is. Ah, there is the gong. Come, Mr. Leverton."

At that moment Speedman entered the dining-room with Dolly leaning upon his arm.

"Mrs. Pearson—Mr. Pearson—congratulate me. Dollie has promised to be my wife."

It was George who spoke, with sparkling eyes and triumphant tone. Leopold could scarcely believe his ears.

"What?" he cried, while Dollie hung her head and blushed bewitchingly.

"Yes. May I congratulate you on having resumed your engagement with Miss Gray?" answered George, seating himself beside Dollie.

"Wha—what do you mean?" stammered Poly, hopelessly bewildered.

"Oh, nothing! Only I thought as you were sending them a turkey you must have—"

It was now George's turn to look surprised.

"I don't understand. There's some mistake. I ordered one to be sent here, hoping Mrs. Pearson would accept—"

"The one I saw was addressed to 71," interrupted George, thinking he began to see light.

"Yes. This is 71; I noticed the number on the garden gate as I passed this morning."

"No," chimed in Mr. Pearson, "this is 171. I noticed the other day that the first figure was almost washed out. We must have it repainted."

"Then my turkey has gone wrong!" exclaimed Leopold. "I must see about it."

He was, as has been previously remarked, an impetuous young man, and before the others could recover from their surprise he was hurrying down the road.

"Who lives at 71?" asked Mr. Pearson, after a short interval of silence.

"The Grays," answered George promptly. "Moved in last week."

Had Leverton stayed one minute to reflect on Speedman's words it is probable that he would have sacrificed a dozen turkeys rather than risk meeting the wrathful pater of his discarded lady love, but so bewildered was he that the possibility of such a contretemps never entered his mind.

The advent of the fateful fowl, with Leverton's note attached, in the Gray household had caused almost as much bewilderment in that household during the afternoon as Leopold was himself experiencing at that momont.

Mrs. Gray unpinned the scrap of paper and read it.

"Why, Laura, Laura!" she cried, running up to the room where her daughter was dressing for a walk. "Mr. Leverton has sent us a turkey!"

Laura let fall the brush she was using and stood gazing at her mother in silence. Then the color mounted to her cheeks, but she did not speak.

Laura read the lines and returned the paper. She was still strangely silent, and her mother, anxious to have an expression of opinion from some one else, trotted off downstairs again to consult Mr. Gray as to what should be done. Laura followed her closely.

Mr. Gray took the slip of paper in his own hands, read it carefully, reread it and then turned it over, as though seeking further enlightenment.

His eyes fell upon the line which had been written by the lad with the poetic soul:

"Let the dead past bury its dead."

"I suppose he means he would like us to let bygones be bygones," replied Mrs. Gray, slowly. "Don't you think so, Laura?"

"Yes," said Laura, very softly.

The afternoon wore swiftly away. A faint appetizing odor arose from the kitchen and gradually permeated the apartment.

As time passed this faint odor gradually intensified, until the hour when Leopold Leverton, having with some difficulty discovered the real No. 71, panted up to the hall door thereof. The fact that a turkey was being prepared for table might have been guessed by any chance passer who happened to be gifted with a critical discrimination in the way of savors.

Steps sounded in the vestibule, the handle rattled, the door was thrown open and a dark figure stood in the doorway.

Poor Poly in his impetuosity had never thought of how he would explain his errand, and now as that savory scent floated from behind that dark figure and struck him full with a suddenly warm gust he began to stammer something about "a mistake" and "a turkey."

Mr. Gray, attributing his confusion to the awkward predicament in which he found himself through having broken so shabbily with Laura, and thinking with an accession of that "good will to all," which often comes over men at the glad Christmastide, to help him out of his difficulty, put forth his hand and half dragged Leverton into the house.

"There, there," he exclaimed, "you're a strange fellow, but if you can make it up with Laura all well and good."

"Mr. Gray," said Leopold, regaining the use of his tongue as his outdoor garments were taken from him, "it has all been a mistake."

"Yes, yes," interrupted Mr. Gray, "but you will find Laura in the drawing room. Explain it to her while dinner is being served."

He pushed the unresisting fellow into the drawing-room, and, himself remaining outside, closed the door behind him.

As Leverton entered a lady rose from the fauteuil upon which she had been seated. It was Laura.

Somehow at sight of her standing there, looking so fair and so sweet in her evening costume, Leopold forgot all about the lady of the legacy, and a sudden feeling of shame stole into his heart and caused the warm blood to rush up into his cheeks.

There was a moment's awkward pause, and then he said bravely:

"Laura, I have been a fool. Can you forgive me?"

"It was I who was to blame," she murmured, brokenly.

So he dined off that erring turkey after all, and that is how it came about that when George and Dollie were married in the ensuing summer there was also a wedding from 71.—Boston Globe.

A Matter of Health.

Housekeepers faintly realize the danger of an indiscriminate use of the numerous baking powders nowadays found upon every hand, and which are urged upon consumers with such persistency by peddlers and many grocers on account of the big profits made in their sale. Most of these powders are made from sharp and caustic acids and alkalies which burn and inflame the alimentary organs and cause indigestion, heartburn, diarrhœal diseases, etc. Sulphuric acid, caustic potash, burnt alum, all are used as gas-producing agents in such baking powders. Most housekeepers are aware of the painful effects produced when these chemicals are applied to the external flesh. How much more acute must be their action upon the delicate internal membranes! Yet unscrupulous manufacturers do not hesitate to use them, because they make a very low-cost powder, nor to urge the use of their powders so made, by all kinds of alluring advertisements and false representations. All the low-priced or so-called cheap baking powders, and all powders sold with a gift or prize, belong to this class.

Baking powders made from chemically pure cream of tartar and bi-carbonate of soda are among the most useful of modern culinary devices. They not only make the preparation of finer and more delicious cookery possible, but they have added to the digestibility and wholesomeness of our food. But baking powders must be composed of such pure and wholesome ingredients or they must be tabooed entirely.

Dr. Edson, Commissioner of Health of New York, in an article in the "Doctor of Hygiene," indicates that the advantages of a good baking powder and the exemption from the dangers of bad ones in which the harsh and caustic chemicals are used, are to be secured by the use of Royal Baking Powder exclusively, and he recommends this to all consumers. "The Royal," he says, "contains nothing but cream of tartar and soda refined to a chemical purity, which when combined under the influence of heat and moisture produce pure carbonic, or leavening, gas. The two materials used, cream of tartar and soda, are perfectly harmless even when eaten, but in this preparation they are combined in exact compensating weights, so that when chemical action begins between them in the dough they practically disappear, the substance of both having been taken to form carbonic acid gas." Hence it is, he says, that the Royal Baking Powder is the most perfect of all conceivable agents for leavening purposes.

It seems almost incredible that any manufacturer or dealer should urge the sale of baking powders containing injurious chemicals in place of those of a well-known, pure, and wholesome character simply for the sake of a few cents a pound greater profit; but since they do, a few words of warning seem to be necessary.

—The biggest diamond in the world has been discovered at the Jagersfontein mines in South Africa, and weighs 971¾ carats. It is three inches long and from one and a half to two and a half inches in breadth and thickness. It is of a perfect color, and is marred by one black spot in the middle, which will drop out if it is cut in two.

—The penny-in-the-slot gas meters in Liverpool now number eight thousand. The success of this ingenious contrivance has led to its introduction into London, Birmingham, Manchester and elsewhere. The latest town to adopt it is Leeds. One penny in the slot at Leeds is to give twenty-five cubic feet of gas, or six hours' light with a No. 4 burner.

—It is not generally known, says the Wall Street News, that $10,000,000 in greenbacks of the laws of July 17, 1861; February 12, 1862, and March 17, 1862, making these notes, then called "demand notes," a full legal tender for all debts public and private, passed through the war and remained at par with gold during all that time, even when gold commanded a premium of 185¼ per cent. in July, 1864.

—It is an old belief of native Hawaiians that the spirits of their warrior chiefs inhabit after death the bodies of their favorite horses. There is even now a fine white stallion in Honolulu in which, it is popularly believed, lives the spirit of Boki, who led a rebellion in Tahiti some years ago. At various times this horse, splendidly caparisoned, is led riderless in state through the principal streets of Honolulu.

—The pine tree shilling was named after the pine tree it bore as its device. It was coined in Massachusetts in the latter half of the seventeenth century and was only one of a series of coins all called pine tree money. The shilling was sometimes called the Boston shilling or the Bay shilling. This was the first coin issued in America and the dies were cut at the Lynn iron works, established in 1646 by Joseph Jenckes.

—Attempt is being made in England to utilize the power absorbed in the application of brakes to tram cars so as to render aid in restarting the car. A spring is charged, which can be released and will start the car without the aid of the horses. A forward and not a recoil movement is at once given to the wheels, but its action can be reversed in case of need—such as overrunning points at junctions. A trial of several months has been given to the apparatus with satisfactory results.

—The only instrument used purely for punishment in English jails nowadays is a crank handle weighted heavily with lead and working heavily inside a box, an indicator at a slit recording the number of revolutions made—8,000 to 11,000 constituting a day's work. Among the purely mechanical labor is included the working at the crank handles of the huge water pump, and by cranks, too, all the meal used in the prison is ground, but in the case of the corn-grinding the prisoner may rest as often as he likes provided he gets through his allotted task.

—Boots are supposed to have been the invention of the Carlans. They were mentioned by Homer, 907 B. C. Greek women possessed twenty-two kinds of footgear, which may be classed as those which cover all the foot up to the ankle and those which simply tied on the top of the foot with wide ribbons and straps. The practice of shoe and sandal wearing can be traced back for some thousands of years and is probably of eastern origin. Frequent mention is made of the shoe in the Bible from the book of Exodus to the Acts and there is mention made of a shoe latchet as early as the time of Abraham.

—The Glenola, a two-masted schooner, which was sunk about six months ago in Great South bay, New York, has been successfully raised by means of air sacks. Messrs. Grant Brothers' air sack system of raising vessels seems to be practically successful. Divers descended into the hold and adjusted huge canvas bags or sacks, which measured twenty by four and a-half feet. Each sack was connected by hose pipes to a powerful air pump, and gradually inflated by air. The gradual inflation of the bags with air slowly lifted the vessel to the surface. It required only about one hour to raise the Glenola after the work of adjusting the bags had been finished.

—The half-yearly reports of the English railroads for the first half of 1893 showed an increase in gross revenue of about ¾ of 1 per cent. and of working expenses of less than ¼ of 1 per cent. The increase in net revenue, therefore, amounts to £217,000. During the year, however, fixed charges increased about 1.2 per cent., which left available for dividends on common stock only about £100,000 more than was available in the first half of 1892. But common stock was increased £4,900,000, or about 3.4 per cent. and the dividends were decreased slightly, for the half year they were at the rate of 3 13-16 per cent. per annum as compared with 3⅞ per cent. in the first half of 1892. This is the lowest rate of dividend paid since 1887, when it was 3⅛ per cent.—N. Y. Railroad Gazette.

An Elizabethan Mariner.

Martin Frobisher, a Yorkshire man and an English navigator of Queen Elizabeth's day, greatly desired to distinguish himself. The only thing in the world that was left yet undone whereby a notable mind might be made famous and fortunate he thought, was to find a northwest passage to India—a favorite dream of his time. For years he sought means. At last he obtained command of two small barks, sailed westward, and discovered the bay in Baffin's Land, near Hudson strait, which we call Frobisher bay. He thought it was the desired passage. Some black earth he brought back was called gold, and excited all England. many people, including Queen Elizabeth, hastened to furnish him a fleet; and he sailed a second time, and returned with shiploads of the supposed ore. But it proved to be worthless. Again he was equipped. This last time a colony went with him. The Queen threw "a chain of faire gold" about the neck of Frobisher, as he set sail upon his third voyage, in 1578.—St. Nicholas.

PERSONAL AND IMPERSONAL.

—A tourist had visited a small historic town. He was shown the massive wall that surrounded it and the immense town gates. "You need to be very careful," he said, gravely, to the official who was his escort. "Why so?" "Some time when these gates are open the village may get lost."

—Senator Proctor is soon to begin the erection of a fine house in Washington at the corner of Vermont avenue and K street. The stone for it will be sent to Washington from Senator Proctor's quarries in Vermont, whence most of the marble used in the construction of the western terraces of the Capitol were brought.

—Mrs. Patti Lyle Collins, of Mississippi, is an invaluable worker in the dead-letter office in Washington, where she is known as "the blind reader"—not that she is blind by any means, for she is wonderfully keen sighted. She has a remarkable facility in ascertaining the intended destination of letters that are "blind" because of incomplete or incorrect addresses.

—Prof. Nicholas Crouch, famed the world over as the author of "Kathleen Mavourneen," was eighty-six years old on July 31. He has lived in Baltimore for a number of years, but is now in New York awaiting the opening of the fall engagement of "Glen-da-lough." "Kathleen Mavourneen" is one of the principal airs in this opera, and during its rendition Prof. Crouch leads the orchestra.

—Roqueplan excelled in practical jokes. When he was manager of the Varietes, Boule, who stuttered, insisted upon reading to him a vaudeville which he had written. Roqueplan said, in his dreamy way: "There is an idea in it. * * * It's amusing to hear all these personages who stutter." * * * "I beg your pardon," replied Boule, "I am the stutterer." "Oh, then," said Roqueplan, "I do not want the play."

—It is said that the French Abbe Delile once had in his household a very quick-tempered relative, with whom he sometimes had animated disputes, and who sometimes went so far as to throw books at the abbe. The abbe must have been a person of great amiability and self-control. Once, when a particularly large and heavy volume was thrown at him, he caught it gracefully and said: "My dear friend, I must beg of you to remember that I prefer small gifts."

—A candid and well-meaning professor, who had witnessed the performance of a little play in a private house, in which his hostess had taken the leading part, met the lady as she came from behind the curtain. "Madam," he said, rushing up to her, "you played excellently; the part fits you to perfection." "Oh, no, professor," said the lady, modestly; "a young and pretty woman is needed for that part." "But, madam," persisted the professor, "you have positively proved the contrary!"

—Prof. Blackie was lecturing to a new class with whose personnel he was imperfectly acquainted. A student rose and read a paragraph, his book in his left hand. "Sir!" thundered Blackie, "hold your book in your right hand!"—and as the student would have spoken—"No words, sir! Your right hand, I say!" The student held up his right arm, ending piteously at the wrist. "Sir, I hae nae right hand," he said. Before Blackie could open his lips, there arose a storm of hisses, and by it his voice was overborne. Then the professor left his place and went down to the student he had unwittingly hurt, and put his arm around the lad's shoulders and drew him close, and the lad leaned against his breast. "My boy," said Blackie—he spoke very softly, yet not so softly but that every word was audible in the hush that had fallen on the class-room—"my boy, you'll forgive me that I was over-rough? I did not know—I did not know!" He turned to the students, and, with a look and tone that came straight from his heart, he said: "And let me say to you all, I am rejoiced to be shown I am teaching a class of gentlemen." Scottish lads can cheer as well as hiss, and that Blackie learned.—Argonaut.

"A LITTLE NONSENSE."

—"By George, there goes a fellow with my umbrella." "Well, why don't you make him give it up?" "Confound it, the man I got it from is right behind me."—Troy Express.

—First Passenger (in a railway train)—"There was quite a coincidence at my house last night." Second Passenger—"Indeed! what was it?" First Passenger—"Twins!"—Tit-Bits.

—Mother (anxiously)—"Are you certain that you can tell a ripe apple from a green one, Ned?" Ned—"Oh, yes'm. I can tell them exactly by the way they taste."—Harper's Young People.

—He Could Blow.—Tomson—"Now put this tube in your mouth and blow hard." Johnson—"I can't."—Tomson—"Nonsense. I've heard you at a political meeting."—Yankee Blade.

—"Why do they say, 'he blew in his money?'" "Because, when he who does it realizes what he has done it is a great blow to him." "O, I see, and then I suppose he feels blue."—N. Y. Press.

—Anarchist Orator (sneeringly)—"They call this the land of promise. What does it promise?" Officer of the Law—"I'll tell you right here. If you keep on, it will promise to land you in the penitentiary."—Pittsburgh Bulletin.

—Watts—"Is it true that you got wind of the bank failure before the doors were closed?" Potts—"No, I went down to get a check cashed an hour after the doors were closed. It was then that I got wind."—Indianapolis Journal.

—His Plan.—Gladys—"How did he let you know he was well off?" Eleanor—"He wrote me." Gladys—"And told you so? What wretchedly bad form!" Eleanor—"Oh, no; he only signed his name, 'Sincerely Yours, S. S. Smithson.'"—Truth.

—Just as she entered the doorway, the car gave a lurch, as street cars are apt to do, and the pretty girl was thrown plump in the lap of a fatherly Irishman. "Pray pardon me," she said, as she rose to her feet, while the rest of the passengers tittered. "Don't mention it, me darlint," replied the Irishman. "I cud hold ye an hour." Then she blushed furiously, and the passengers snickered aloud.—Brooklyn Life.

WESTERN WISDOM.

IT makes no difference how innocent a man may be, if he is suspected, everything he does is a sign of guilt.

INSTEAD of pitying the babies, they should be envied. They not only get a nice bath every day, but get powdered after it.

THERE is a great deal of difference between keeping a horse on its feet, and raising one up by the tail after it is down.

Thirty Days More.

Did you ever give a note for 30 days. If so, you have a distinct idea of how short a time a month is. And that is all the time you will have to see the greatest exhibition ever given of the world's progress in art, science and manufactures, for the great Columbian Exposition at Chicago will end on the 31st day of the present month. In fact, you will not have quite 30 days from the time you read this. It is not possible, in these limits, to tell you of all (or even a part) that you can see there—but if you would realize something about it, ask your neighbors who have been there. You will find that the only regret they have is that they cannot go again. Is there any better commendation than that? Never again (probably) in the lifetime of persons now 20 years old, will there be such an exhibition held in America. No one who can spare the time and money should think of staying away. As to how to get there—well, you cannot do better than to buy your ticket to Chicago and return over the "Burlington Route," and ask your home agent, or any agent of the Burlington for further particulars, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, General Passenger Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

CHARLEY—"So, Jim, you are extravagant enough to pay twenty dollars a dozen for your handkerchiefs. Don't you think that was a good deal of money to blow in?"—Columbia Spectator.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

FROM GIRLHOOD TO WOMANHOOD.

The change is fraught with dangers. If there be pain, headache and nervous disturbances, or the general health poor, the judicious use of medicine should be employed. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the best tonic and nervine at this time. It brings about a regularity in the womanly functions, cures female weakness, catarrhal inflammation, and uterine derangements.

Seaview, Northampton County, Va.

DR. R. V. PIERCE: Dear Sir—After taking your medicine I feel like a new person. I shall recommend you and your medicine wherever I go. Your medicine has worked wonders for me and I can not praise it too much. All of my old symptoms have disappeared.

Yours respectfully,
MRS. WILLIETTA DOUGHTY.

WHAT IS THE OLD RELIABLE?

It is the oldest and most reliable railway in operation between the Twin Cities (St. Paul and Minneapolis) and Chicago—the CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE & ST. PAUL.

Its train service is more frequent than that of any other line and unequaled in point of excellence, comfort, speed and safety.

It runs FIVE complete and handsomely equipped passenger trains from the Twin Cities to Chicago each day—FOUR of which pass through Winona, La Crosse, Portage, Watertown and Milwaukee, the other passing through Austin, Dubuque and Savanna.

It is the only road running trains lighted by electricity and has the exclusive use of the famous electric reading lamp in each berth. All trains thoroughly heated by steam, doing away with the old time car stove.

It runs the latest library buffet smoking cars, the latest private compartment cars, elegant drawing room sleeping cars, and free reclining chair cars on night trains, and parlor drawing room chair cars on day trains. Dining cars, (the finest in the west) are attached to each train, serving first class meals at convenient hours.

Everybody has heard of the renowned vestibuled, electric lighted, steam heated limited of "THE MILWAUKEE." This is the most thoroughly and luxuriantly equipped train running between the Twin Cities and Chicago. No extra charge. Leaves Minneapolis 7:30 and St. Paul 8:10 every evening; arrives Chicago 9:30 following morning.

The enormous traffic constantly carried over this road between Chicago and the Northwest has necessitated and resulted in one of the most solid and substantial roadbeds in this country, which, together with its unrivalled passenger train equipment and service, insures to its patrons the highest degree of safety and ease.

Now is the time to visit the World's Fair—the grandest opportunity the American people ever have had of seeing the world in miniature. See that your tickets read via "THE MILWAUKEE," and thus secure the best possible service, and unsurpassed accommodations—the very best to be obtained for your money. J. T. CONLEY,

DELANO DIARY

--This is Vol. VI, No. 1.

--The school boys are getting up a Rugby game of ball for a change.

—August Baldus was in after a load of lumber last week for the addition to his residence.

--Some of our citizens claim to have as high as 20 bushels of butternuts stored away for winter.

—The night passenger train was delayed about three quarters of an hour here last night for lack of steam.

—F. F. Chancellor paid $5 and costs in Justice Walter's court last week for assault and battery on Nels Oberg.

—Mrs. Lucy Felt had Nels Oberg arrected for arson, last week. Mr. Oberg is charged with burning a stack of hay on H. Felts farm.

—Professor Bohn proudly informs us the Kimball pianos and organs for which he is agent, took first prizes at the World's Fair.

—Bishop Ninde will preach at the M. E. Conference, in Minneapolis on Sunday, at 10:30 a. m. Several Delanoites expect to hear him.

--At the M. E. Quarterly Conference held at the church in Delano last Wednesday an entire new set of church officers were elected.

—S. E. Farnham is making arrangements to move to Waverly and engage in the manufacture of cigars. Ed. thinks Waverly is the banner Wright county town.

—The tiling laid from Second street to the river looks more like business than any previous efforts to drain the town. All that seems to be lacking is the establishing of the grade.

—Fred Adicks, Jr., has purchased the corn husking machine with which Joe Cronk had so unfortunate an experience last fall, and intends to run it for all there is in it in his neighborhood.

--The village council have been having some tiling placed along Bridge street, at a little lower level than the old drain and hope to keep some of the old nuisances dry in future. No town presents easier facilities for draining than Delano.

--Rev. Blackhurst, pastor of the Methodist church preaches his farewell sermon to-morrow evening. Mr. Blackhurst is an able man, and during the two years that he has been in Litchfield, has made many friends who will be sorry to have him leave.-Litchfield Review.

—Messrs. J. Hehl, of Long Lake and Wm. Ziebarth with their attorneys and Justice Walter have been devoting some time to the question of whether Mr. Z. should have kept some sheep purchased, conditionally by Mr. H. a longer time than he did, before selling them to another party.

—We received a letter from Rev. W. H. Wilson, a former Delano pastor this week, in which he informs us that he is now preaching at Winlock, Wash., where he has been stationed for the coming year. He writes that his work at Bucoda was successful during the past year, and hopes it may be so in his new field this year.

—The "Star Dramatic Company," of Delano, will present "An Only Daughter" in the Opera House here in a few weeks. The company is a new one and is composed of the following members: Joe Bernick, D. Dugan, J. M. Schaeffer, Jake Mayer, Leo Epple, Lena Haffner, Agnes Austin and Mary Austin.

—The Eagle surprised many people this week by her pacific tones. She has found that no old soldiers about here have been dropped from the pension rolls. That a wind-mill could be used to advatage for water works. That the school is in a more flourishing condition than for years. That a grade for the streets would be a fine thing for the village, and shows other signs of coming to her senses! Good.

—Old papers for sale at this office.

—Brick $8 per 1000 at John Coolen's.

—If you need lime, call on John Coolen. 27.

—Prof. Beck is now duly installed as instructor of the Delano Cornet Band.

--If some one would level up the Watertown road nicely before cold weather comes they would receive the thanks of many weary travelers this winter.

—To-morrow, Saturday, will be the November Delano Monthly Fair, and Monday following the Watertown fair. These are two of the largest sale days in the country.

—Our new millers are reported as doing about twice the custom work they expected to do when they came. This is a good milling town. Adam Horsch is contributing his share to the business by grinding feed on the west side.

Personals.

I. Gutzwiller, Jr., done business at Buffalo, Tuesday.

Henry Bock visited St. Michaels this week on insurance business.

Dr. Catlin visited Maple Lake on Tuesday and heard Hon. S. M. Owen speak.

A. W. Dorman, of Greenwood, made a business trip to Delano, on Wednesday.

Rev. J. R. Davies and wife left for Minneapolis, last evening, to attend the M. E. Conference.

S. B. Kohler and wife, of Watertown, passed through town on Monday, on their way to the World's Fair.

James R. Sutton, of St. Paul, visited Delano friends to-day. Jim seems to get "homesick" quite often now-a-days.

Editor Roll, Miller Johnson and Attorney Sexton, of Cokato, came home by Delano, from the Populist meeting on Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Quinn, Sr., of West Franklin, were Delano visitors on Saturday. They have rented their farm and intend moving to Waverly, soon.

County Cullings.

The Irih towns of Maple Lake and Waverly don't seem to notice hard times as much as some of the other villages in Wright county. Blood will tell.

John Purcel's 4-year-old daughter, of Marysville, ate poison ivy berries and is reported to have died in twenty minutes after the first symtoms of sickness from them.

While passing through the County seat on Tuesday, County Attorney Culkin pointed out to us the proposed site of the Buffalo match factory. It is a matchless situation, so far.

Miss Mable Chadderdon, formerly of the Waverly Tribune and P.C.Koerner of Litchfield, are reported as among the Excelsior students recently poisoned by vinegar. They are recovering.

If the Democrats would only guarantee to let the tariff alone during its one term of administration they might talk during the whole time on the silver question. We would stand three years more buying silver at the present rate if the manufacturers were assured that they could continue under the present schedule. Factory hands need flour and the farmers have wheat to sell, but the laboring man is obliged to go hungry and the farmer is obliged to sell his wheat for less than cost. It is a blessing that these "good old Democratic times" do not come often.—Howard Lake Herald.

If the Repuplicans had only let the tariff alone perhaps there would have been no change of administration. But as the people concluded to have the Democrats in power awhile for the purpose of revising the tariff we think if the Democrats know what is good for them they will hurry up and change the tariff. Put raw material on the free list.

Mr. Marooney, who was shot at Maple Lake a few weeks ago, is rapidly improving, we are informed.

Combinations, rings, trades and other arrangements in politics are already being talked at different places in the county. There seems to be a general feeling all along the lines that Wright county has had enough of bartering and trading between parties.

Among Our Exchanges.

Montgomery, Minn., Sept. 29.—J. J. Leonard, of Jordan has purchased the Montgomery Messenger. He will assume charge next Wednesday. The paper has heretofore been a Republican sheet. The new editor will expound Jeffersonian Democracy.—Globe.

Chaska, Minn., Sept. 29.—The famous bear case, which has excited a great deal of speculation here for the past three months, has finally been determined after a long and hotly contested trial. The jury returned a verdict of manslaughter in the second degree. The defendants, Joseph and Henry Rademacher, shot and killed John Wojohn on the public highway in this county some time last June. After the act they gave themselves over to the authorities and advanced the story that they supposed the object they were shooting at was a bear.—Globe.

The suspension of the plate works at Elizabethtown, N. J., recorded in yesterday's dispatches, shows the manner in which this industry has been fostered. The working force consisted almost entirely of Welchmen, who were imported for the express purpose, and who are now about to return to their native land. The importation of these men, two hundred in number, was in direct violation of the federal law forbidding the importation of laborers under contract. Their return to Wales at this time gives all the proof of such contract that is necessary, and those who brought them here should be promptly prosecuted and punished according to law.—Globe.

Maj. Baldwin is having rather hard sleddin' these times, and occasionally gets a post office, that's about all. The Duluth People's Press says:

Maj. Baldwin has been sot down on again. He tried to have the Taylor Falls land-office removed to Hinckley, but his efforts were coolly ignored by Secretary Smith and Commissioner Lamoreaux, who decided, in spite of the Baldwin power, to consolidate the Taylor Falls land office.—Sauk Rapids Sentinel.

If the people wish to see Major Baldwin secure any local legislation for their benefit, such remarks as the above eminating from a brain stimulated by partisanship or jealousy, should be discouraged. There is much local legislation needed by this congressional district, and abuse of our representative will hardly be conducive of the desired results. There are many zealous partisans who would like to see Maj. Baldwin unable to accomplish anything, and thus have a little campaign thunder, with which to down him a year hence.—Mille Lacs County times.

Court of Sanhedrin.

MINNEAPOLIS, Oct. 4.

MR. EDITOR GAZETTE:

Having been summoned here by one of the chief deputies of this court to serve as a juror for two weeks more or less am now under oath to obey the laws of the State of Minnesota and this court and for past time while off duty I thought I would write a few lines to the GAZETTE. I belong to the upper house of this department or at least I suppose so as it is in the upper story, and for my service get two dollars per day and mileage into the city, nothing allowed for extra duty or board.

Now this Hennepin county court is a big thing and it takes lots of money to keep it going. There is a jail or county prison run in connection with this court. Also keep boarders by the day or week, and the house they sav is well patronized and has more than it can accomodate. It is thought our salary will be increased when the extra session of Congress repeals the Sherman act, for then wages are coming up. The calander of course numbers a great many and the lawyers are having a "feast of fat things and wine on the leaf." Most of the people around here have good clothes and are well polished on the outside which gives them a Sunday like appearance. The committee on Ways and Means, (County commissioners), is down stairs and is in regular session the first Monday of every month. The new Court House, or Salt Lake Temple is not completed yet, and work has been abandoned for lack of funds, but if the present Congress repeal the Sherman act, and the democrats let the McKinley bill run a couple of years there will be plenty of money, and no doubt the building will be completed by the next Presidential campaign.

To a casual observer it would seem that everybody here is doing a first-class business as it takes about so much bustle to keep things running.

The Minnesota State Annual Conference of the M. E. church is now in session here. It is held at the Wesley M. E. church, corner of First aveuue south and Grant street. So the city is full of preachers and yellow legged chickens. Your correspondent has attended one session of the conferance and find it very interesting, and will avail myself of the opportunity of being there as much as possible during conference. Still religious bodies, in many respects, do not have much similarty to the howling mob of a district court room.

Some of the people here say times are looking up a little notwithstanding the extra session of the American Congress. Yours in favor of a free ballot and a fair court.

DIED.

BARTLETT.—On Tuesday, Oct. 3, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Bartlett, aged 2 mos. 22 da.

WHAT WE ARE, NOW AND AT ELECTION TIME.

We're Communists and Socialists
And dynamyters, too;
We're slaves of Walking Delegates
Who tell us what to do.
There's nothing we should kick about,
We've all got cheek sublime;
But we're "bone and sinew of the land"
About
Election
Time.

We're howlers of calamity,
We're crazy flat fools,
We're lawless scum and foreigh scruff
And stubborner nor any mules.
They threaten us with gatling guns
And in our hair to climb—
But we're "thinking toilers of the land"
About
Election
Time.

We're wild-eyed hayseeds, lazy shirks,
Alliande trators, knaves;
We're looters of the vaults of wealth,
And our speaker always "raves:"
We're a danger to the country
And republic all the time—
But we're "honest, sturdy farmers"
About
Election
Time.

We're everything that's vile and mean
For twice three hundred days;
Militia thugs and Pinkertons
Are hired on us to blaze
If we demand but justice
As against a gilded crime.
But we're "valiant hosts of labor"
About
Election
Time.

They tax us and they drive us,
And mock us in our woe;
They tell us we're responsible,
That we have made it so.
And we stand right up and take it
While the bloats their pockets line.
Oh, we're several million darndest fools
About
Election
Time.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

AMERICANS appear to be a little too Vigilant for the English, even in a yacht race.

THE Tucker bill to repeal the Federal election laws passed the House on Tuesday, 200 for to 101 against.

THE Daily News has made arrangements with the United Press Association for latest news and is booming things.

WHO says Minnesotians are afraid of war? Behold! Editor Baker in the Nicaragua affair and now C. H. Benedict, Council to Cape Town, right in the thickest of the fight.

THE Daily Globe comes out this morning with a Minnesota Day edition, issued simultaneously in St. Paul and Chicago. It certainly shows great enterprise on the part of the publishers, and it is a paper no Gopher will be ashamed of.

IT SEEMS as if the school authorities in Minneapolis had grown "a penny wise and a pound foolish" in closing their night schools for the winter. It will probably cost more to care for the waywardness of those who are deprived of the privileges of school than it would to run the schools.

THE Weekly Valley Herald is authority for saying that the Rodimaher brothers who were convicted of killing John Wojohn, whom they claimed to have mistaken for a bear, have had their sentence modified from imprisonment at Stillwater to a fine of $650, each, by the judge, on a petition from the citizens of the place.

O. M. HALL, one of Minnesota's Democratic Congresmen is booked for some good old tariff speeches in Ohio during this fall's campaign. He can make 'em all right. And if Mr. Leary has many assistants like O. M. he will be pretty apt to be the next Govenor of Ohio, in spite of the McKinley bill and those seven tin plate mills that haue just started up.

WRIGHT county is coming to the front as kickers. There's Madigan, of Maple Lake, is center rush and captain of the Minnesota University foot ball team, and Chas. S. Hawker, of Delano, one of the kickers in the Hamline University team, and Delano has a newly organized team. There is nothing like being up to the times, and Wright county is certainly up in this line.

MR. SOWLES, of Vermont, has appeared in Minneapolis claiming that $750,000 of the Green Mountain boy's wealth had gone with the Guaranty Loan business and threatens to sue the directors. He shound have his money. If Minneapolis capitalists names are good enough to draw custom as seems to have been the case, the owners of the names should see that the debts are paid and preserve their credit for future and legitimate uses.

IF CONGRESSMAN HALL can't secure one of the tin medals turned out by the seven mills just started up, we have one in our Archives that was worn in the '92 campaign for a few days by our Republican Congressional Committeeman and which was claimed as the genuine "American" tin, (the only piece of American tin we know of in the county, unless French of the Times has one) which we will loan him for use during the Ohio campaign. It would be too bad for a Minnesota Congressman not to have one when on such an important mission.

Some Populist Ideas.

Some of our dissatisfied citizens claim to believe that it would be a great benefit to the country if a line of railroad from the Atlantic to the Pacific seaboard was owned by the Government, and run by the Government. That the Government would then virtually be in a position to control all other roads. That they could dictate terms and tariffs for freight and passenger trafic across the continent. Would the supposed benefits in case they were realized offset the evils attending the going into business, of the Government? Of course if the Government is going to become a paternal government is going to own railroads, and if it is beneficial it must be carried on further. She must buy a telegraph line, an express line. She must start manufactories of different kinds. She must look after the smallest wants of the humblest citizen. She must be father to all. Everybody must have what they need, furnished by Uncle Sam. Every one of the railroad officials, the telegraph officials, the express and other men must be appointed through political influence. Every man about a manufactory belonging to the government, must get his position as a postmaster, marshal, internal revenue officer, or other government official, does now. And when everything of importance belongs to the government, there will be little use for the Pouulists and other reformers to ask for changes in the financial system, the tariff system, or any other system, the government having everything under control may prolong its life "ad infinitum."

Partisan Spirit for You.

Yesterday's Eagle comes out with the following quotation of which she says: "The following opinion "Why McKinley should be re-elected" was published in the last issue of the American Economist from Mr. W. E Culkin, our county attorney:"

Governor McKinley should be re-elected in Ohio this fall in order that Democracy with its Altgeltism, its demagoguery, its corruption and its hatred of progress may thereby be defeated. He should be elected in order that soup houses should not be built in the public parks of every American city, which will happen if Democracy succeeds. He should be elected in order to discourage that party which caters to the cowardice of the wealthy and the passions of the ignorant; which favors foreign manufacturers in American markets and seeks to destroy our own prosperity; which winks at Mormonism in Utah and brazenly declares that free suffrage shall not exist in the South; which today deems it to have been a greater honor to have been a rebel than a Union soldier. The continuance of Democratic domination will be a great blow to our country and the people. The re-election of Governor McKinley will inspire Republicanism anew and our party of the people, the true populist party, the party of progress, of character, the party of positive views, of united action, will in due season resume its control of the country's affairs.

WM. E. CULKIN, Attorney at-Law.
Buffalo, Minn., July 11, 1893.

In justice to all parties concerned it is fair to presume that when the Hon. Billy penned these inflamatory sentiments, for use in the Ohio campaign, he did not think they would, like an Australian boomerang return to the starting place. He probably never reconed on having any of his Wright county friends see this article. And then to have the "rara avis" up street reproduce it as a sample of smartness. If there are any others in the county who think McKinley should be elected Governor of Ohio for the reasons above given, we hope they will say so, at once. It looks as if the gentleman might have sent this as a sample of what he could do in hopes of getting a job stumpping for McKinley. If so he should have stuck closer to McKinleys pet, Protection.

What is Money?

One of the much disputed questions before the American and other peoples today is "What is Money?" All agree that it is something used as a medium of exchange. Something for which everyone is willing to give that they have to sell, and with which they can pay for anything they wish to buy that is for sale. Webster defines it as follows: Money, coin, stamped metal, pieces of metal, usually gold, silver or coper, stamped by public authority, used as the medium of commerce." The best money is that that is most easily handled, the most durable, and that that will be received without question by the most people. Gold and silver coins appear to have been satisfactory for about 2000 years in a greater measure than any other tried medium.

Our Populist friends tell us they want no better money than the "faith and credit of our nation." Whence came the credit and faith of our nation? Did not our coin aid in getting us them? Then why now discard so old and so good a friend? Whose credit is better than he who pays cash? Who can command the faith of the people better than he who is able to meet his promises? The populists tell us that our inexhaustible resources are sufficient to found the credit of our nation on for millions of paper money for years to come. They say "upon our forests, our mines, our wheat, our corn and other resources we should found our paper dollars." That this is the best basis for money. Who would take our paper dollars away from our own country? Don't our inexhaustible forests burn up? Don't our mines give out? Don't our wheat, corn and potatoes fail to produce in sufficient quantities, sometimes, to supply our own wants much less to issue paper money on?

They tell us that the most prosperous nations are those whose ratio per capita of money, keeps increasing. How would it be with our paper money, easy to make, costing little and worth less? Would we not soon arrive at the condition of the old clown who said "my note is good because everybody has got it?" And would not our countries natural resources grow smaller year by year as the country settles, would there not be less per capita of "basis" left each year while our notes only grow larger in number.

Would it not be safer for us to base our money upon the gold and silver that has served our nation since it came into existance as well as other countries for centuries before rather than throw it away and use paper in its stead? How many of you would accept a paper dollar from any other country? Do you not now discount Canada money, coin at that, with Queen Victoria's head stamped on, at the rate of 25 per cent? Could you expect other countries to use us better?

As for gold and silver being unfit for use, as to the fact that a silver half dollar will not keep us warm, or will not feed us, will it not do as much in that direction as will a paper half dollar, or as the surplus of our crops which we offer for sale? If we warmed by our forests or ate our wheat, corn or potatoes we could not use them instead of coin very well, neither could we found the credit of our nation on them and issue paper money in an increased ratio because we had consumed so much of our resources. Our natural resources, our money basis would grow smaller each year and place us in the list of declining countries according to the Populistic idea.

Meeker County Treasurer Suspended.

Last week C. H. Dart, county treasurer of Meeker county was suspended by Gov. Nelson on a report of Public Examiner Kenyon, Deputy West having made the investigation and reported that the Treasurer was carrying checks to the amount of $2,281 instead of the cash, which checks had been held for several months contrary to law, and charging that "the treasurer has been drinking more or less for some time and his reputation is bad." The County Commissioners appointed Mr. Dart to succeed himself pending the examination, as they found he had made good all deficiencies, righted as far as possible any wrongs. It is reported that he was told if he would deposit in the Bank of Litchfield it would be all right. Some think it is a political scheme as Mr. Dart is a Democrat. We give below some clippings from the Litchfield Independent:

"Governor Knute Nelson is a stockholder in the Bank of Litchfield. He stands credited with 26 shares, par value $2,600. He has been a stockholder for several months, though it has not been generally known heretofore. The Dart case has brought the fact to public notice."

Explanation.

LITCHFIELD, Minn., Oct. 9, 1893.

Owing to the many unnecessary remarks that have been made in regard to the action of the county commissioners at their meeting last Friday the 6th inst., we deem it our duty to justify ourselves in the matter in the appointment of C. H. Dart as County Treasurer to succeed himself. We did not do it through any disregard for the Chief Executive of the State of Minn., Gov. Nelson, but on the contrary, we have the greatest respect for the Governor of this State in his official capacity. The appointment of C. H. Dart was not only a matter of courtesy but a matter of justice to him after we had found how his affairs stood; we further most emphatitally state that there was no pilities in the matter and that the County Commissioners of Meeker county do not do business on a political basis.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)
WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 6, 1893.

President Cleveland's motive in having all his callers state the nature of their business to his private secretary before being admitted to his office has been so grossly misrepresented that I present the facts, which follow: So much of the president's time has been lost in listening to the appeals of Congressmen and other prominent democrats for offices for their friends that he has found it necessary to stay up the greater portion of nearly every night in order to perform his more important duties. In order to put a stop to this he determined to place the duty of choosing all officials upon the members of his cabinet, he accepting their recommendation as final, and in order to save his own time, as well as that of his callers, those who call at the White House are required to state the nature of their business to private secretary Thurber. If it be about an appointment the new rule is explained and they are referred to the member of the cabinet who has jurisdiction of office wanted; if about public business they are at once taken to the President. The change is popular with Congressmen and will strike most people as being a sensible one.

The most notable incidents of the silver debate in the Senate this week were the appeals made by Senators Butler, of South Carolina, and Blackburn, of Kentucky, to the Senate to end the controversy by compromise. Although compromise has been talked about privately by Senators this is the first time that it has been publicly advocated on the floor of the Senate. Senator Voorhees still stands out against compromise and insists that the bill for conditional repeal can be passed. Predictions are freely made that the question will be disposed of next week, but the same sort of predictions have been made before and it still remains undisposed of. The Senate is having more or less difficulty now in keeping a quorum, and if some agreement is not soon reached on this silver question it is doubtful whether a quorum can be kept here. The Senators are tired of the debate, and there is no way to force a vote.

There is one Congressman—he's a Tammany man, too—who is always certain of a warm welcome when he calls at the White House, whether he goes asking an appointment for a friend or to discuss public matters. The reason is this: On the day that Baby Esther was born this Congressman was aproached by a loud-mouthed individual who has made himself conspicuous by his personal abuse of President Cleveland—probably because he was turned down by him—in a well known restaurant, which was at the time crowded with prominent men, and the aforesaid loud-mouthed individual made a disrespectful remark about the baby whose birth had just been announced. The Tammany Congressman walked close up to the man and deliberately spat in his face. The coward sneaked of like the cur that he is, and the Congressman was asked why he did not knock him down. "Strike him," he remarked scornfully. "I would not dirty my hands with such as he." Within an hour the incident was reported to the President, and since then he is never to busy to see that Tammany Congressman when he calls at the White House. The Tammany Congressman has, however, asked for nothing since the incident, for, as he puts it, "I do not wish to be rewarded for having done what any good citizen would have done—resented an insult to the family of the President."

The House need not be idle after the vote is taken on the bill for the repeal of the Federal election laws, next week, even if the tardiness of the Senate in disposing of the silver question prevents the recess which many congressmen would like to take, particularly those from states in which elections will be held this fall. The McGreary substitute for the Geary Chinese law has been favorably reported to the House from the Foreign Committee and can be taken up at any time, and the Judiciary Com. reported the Oates bankruptcy bill to the House. It is probable that the Chinese bill will be given the preference.

How much truth there is in the talk among republicans about the democratic members of the House committee of Ways and Means being afraid to attack protection may be inferred from the following remarks made by a democratic member of that committee: "The new tariff bill will be framed on the lines laid down by the Chicago platform, even if it results in the defeat at the polls of every democratic member of the committee. We shall hew close to the line and you can rest assured that no matter what else is done it will be found that the tariff bill when it is reported will be completely in accord with the democratic platform." The republicans who are trying to create a contrary impression are doing a foolish thing. It is much better that the country should know at once that the high protective duties of the McKinley law will be entirely wiped out by the new bill.

The republicans have allowed the debate in the House on the bill for the repeal of the Federal election laws to go by default, keeping more or less quiet by order of Boss Reed.

Senator Allen talked for twelve hours and forty five minutes, said to be the longest continuous speech on record. All against repeal.

Washington, Oct. 12.—After a continuous session of thirty-eight hours and forty minutes, Senator Voorhees, leading the repeal force, was compelled by the inability of his followers to longer stand the terrible strain, to capitulate, temporarily, at least, by yielding to an adjournment. He had been trying all night to induce the silver men to allow the senate to take a recess until tomorrow morning and thus keep the legislative day, which began Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock alive. But the obstinate silverites would accept only adjournment. At 1:40 a. m., after the quorum had been twice broken and for over an hour he reluctantly threw up the spongue. This forces the repealers to relinquish the ground they secured and begin all over again if the attempt to secure a vote by brute force is to be attempted once more. Senator Voorhees and Senator Palmer and other administration men claim that adjournment does not nesessarily mean an abandonment of the fight. The silver senators and compromisers jubilantly assert that the victory is theirs, that unconditional repeal is dead absolutely, and that nothing remains but compromise. And compromise, the indications are, it will be along the line of the Harris amendment.—St. Paul Globe, of this morning.

LONG LAKE.

Early on Wednesday morning the dwelling of Isaac A. Christlieb was destroyed by fire, Mr. Christlieb barely escaping from the flames with his life. It appears that he was sleeping in an upstairs appartment and from loss of sleep previous nights slept very soundly and was oblivious to danger from which he was only partially aroused by another man who occupied a bed in the same room and who then being awakened by the close proximity of the fire was making his escape, succeeding in making an exit by the stairway, but Mr. C. did not become fully awakened until the flames and smoke passing through a doorway struck him in his bed and when it was too late to get out by the stairway. He managed to escape from his perilous situation by throwing himself from a window with a few garments. The rest of the inmates were sleeping below and made their escape. A small amount of personal effects were saved. Mr. C. lost valuable papers and many family relics both of intrinsic value and endearing associations. The loss is covered by insurance.

THERE is one good argument in favor of the union of the states of Central and South America in one great republic. Instead of a constant succession of petty revolutions there would be a big one every now and then, followed by a period of profound peace.

EDISON says that he can manufacture fine sapphires inexpensively, and as for rubies, he can produce them at five dollars per pound, and of a kind to excel the genuine in beauty. THE report comes from Boston that Mr. Garner has sent a letter to a philanthropist there asking contributions for the African monkeys in the shape of rattles, balls, tin trumpets and other small toys, including dolls. IT is one of the greatest mistakes of people of moderate means to make their little girls up into young ladies before they are half-grown. Childhood and girlhood are too desirable to fritter away in a medley of clothes, fussiness, ceremony and worry about personal appearance. The time spent on such things is much better used if given to study, the improvement of the mind and the care of the body, with exercise and amusement to keep them in healthy condition.

MME. BERNHARDT has an artist's appreciation of the beautiful. From the steamer in the roadstead at Rio de Janeiro she witnessed the earlier bombardment of the city by the revolutionist fleet and pronounces the spectacle "simply exquisite." No thought of the suffering and terror of the inhabitants appears to have entered her mind to mar the enjoyment of the hour. The expression quoted gives warrant to the inference that, after all, madame's adoption of a tiger as a pet was not altogether an affectation.

G. W. DYE, of Eberton, Ga., who died a few days ago, bequeathed his whole estate, valued at $600,000, to a negro family, the members of which he had owned before the war. He was an eccentric man, and in antebellum days was a large slaveholder, living on a baronial estate upon which no white woman was allowed to set her foot. With the abolition of slavery he still retained his lands and built up another fortune with the assistance of the negroes to whom he has bequeathed everything. Under the circumstances it would seem he did the correct thing.

ONE of the English newspapers got excited over the management, or, as it asserted, mismanagement of the Mile End Workhouse. One of the leading items of the list of charges was that the corsets which were supplied to the "lady paupers" were bought for 2s 6d a dozen, or about 5 cents each. Investigation, however, proved that the lady paupers had not been subjected to the indignity of wearing 5-cent corsets as their only visible support, for the management conclusively proved that they had furnished a luxurious article costing over 35 cents. Upon this journalistic wrath was appeased.

'MID GORGEOUS SCENES.

CHICAGO, Oct. 11.—It was an ideal day for the observance of Chicago day at the world's fair grounds. From morning until night not a cloud appeared in the sky. The White City never was more beautiful, standing out in such delightful contrast against the blue of the sky, with the blue lake for its foreground, covered with streamers, steam yachts and sail vessels, each one of them black with its living freight. To the aspect of beauty which it always wears, be the weather what it may, was added a holiday aspect of gayety from the profusion of flags and banners which everywhere fluttered in the breeze.

The Dark Side.

A large number of disasters occurred during the day. Four men were killed and a score or more of persons were injured.

A Marvelous Record.

By 10 o'clock in the forenoon it was apparent that the Fourth of July record had been broken, and by noon it was estimated that there were between 300,000 and 400,000 persons within the gates, and still the rush continued at the turnstiles. Every train was crowded. Hour after hour the continuous tide of humanity poured in. The expected half-million mark was reached and passed.

The count of tickets was not completed until 1:45 this morning. It was then announced that the paid admissions numbered 713,646. This included 682,587 adults and 31,059 children. Add to this number a total of 37,380 admissions on passes, and the grand total of the attendance on Chicago day reached 751,026

Midway Packed Full.

An inspiring and wonderful sight was the Midway east of the Ferris wheel at any time in the afternoon. West of the wheel the crowd was not so great, but east of it, from side to side and end to end, a black mass of people was moving slowly in either direction so tightly packed that one could have walked on the heads from end to end without ever taking a long step or missing footing.

The concessionaires' record of admissions was a queer one in that some of the places on Midway did a phenomenal business while others had no more patronage than Saturday. The Ferris wheel led in the matter of attendance, having the enormous total of 40,000 people for the day, 15,000 more than were ever carried before. In the afternoon the wheel was carrying over 4,000 an hour. It ran over sixteen hours Monday. Hagenback's menagerie reports over 25,000 admissions for the day; the Moorish palace over 20,000, and other places of amusement reported big crowds.

The Transportation Companies.

The Illinois Central railroad broke all records for handling passenger traffic. Trains were run one minute apart, and an average of 20,000 persons an hour were sent out from the Van Buren street station on the two tracks in use. For a part of the time they were handled at the rate of 1,000 per minute.

The Chicago City Railway company, that is the south side cable, with its cross-town electric lines on Thirty-fifth, Forty-seventh, Sixty-first and Sixty-third streets and its horse car lines, handled 700,000 passengers, according to the president of the company, Mr. Wheeler.

The officials of the alley "L" road were swamped. The service was inadquate to meet the demand made upon it. Literally no estimate has been made of the crowd handled by the "L" road.

It is estimated that the lake steamers carried 140,000 passengers during the day.

The Exercises.

CHICAGO, Oct. 11.—The exercises of Chicago day at Jackson park began on the plaza west of the Administration building at 9 a. m. when Mayor Harrison was presented with the original deed to Chicago by Miss Emma Sickles. The deed was given to the government sixty years ago by the Pottawattomie tribe. It had been preserved all these years in the family of Pokagon, who was chief of the Pottawattomies, and who signed the deed. Simon Pokagon, his son, was on the grounds all day, and at 9 a. m. rang the new liberty bell in honor of the first owners of Chicago.

A Great Event in Music.

At 11:30 o'clock the men and women of the choir of 800 voices were ready for the first motion of Director Tomlins' baton. The band played the "Star Spangled Banner." The first bars were drowned in mighty cheers. Director Tomlins flourished his baton and in a wave the music swept over the plaza. The patriotism of the mutitude boiled, and cheer after cheer arose when the last strains of the national anthem died away. Next the choir sung the "Marseillaise" and the barred banner of France snapped proudly from places of honor on the four sides of the court. And the hymn of French liberty received its share of plaudits from an American throng. When the chorus sung "Die Wacht am Rhine" it was a hearty recognition the sons of the fatherland gave it. But all through the category of national anthems there was no song which seemed to evidence its hold on the affections of the people like "Home, Sweet Home." They stood silent while the song was being sung. The incessant hum of the thousands seemed to subside, but when it was over there was a moment of quiet, then the mighty cheer. When "America" was sung hats went flying into the air and over the heads of the multitude handkerchiefs fluttered. "John Brown's Body" and "Marching Through Georgia" ended the programme.

Exercises About the Bell.

At noon the crowd faced about. All eyes turned to the liberty bell on the opposite side of the plaza. The people only turned about in their places and could not move backward or forward. The new "international rope" for the bell had been attached to the ponderous clapper. The basis of the rope is a rawhide made in Chicago, and about it was a strip of flax woven by Queen Victoria, a rope made of the hair of forty Indian maidens of forty different American tribes and ropes contributed by sixty foreign nations. Chairman McDowell, of the Liberty Bell association, told the people something of the bell and its composition of historical relics. Then Mayor Harrison spoke a few words, and seizing the now historical rope gave a pull and the new bell pealed out thirteen times in honor of the original states of the union.

School Children in Line.

When 1,500 school children appeared in the Court of Honor early in the afternoon the crowd made way without protest. Chattering with the volubility of magpies, giving vent to shrill cries, laughing, talking and cheering, the little people pattered along as though they were following some pied piper. Their procession represented the reunion of the states. Sixteen heralds, stalwart youths in the fancy dress of the medieval age, came first. Following marched 100 lads of the diocesan choir, led by Director F. A. Dunster, singing a processional. Thirty-four boys representing the thirty-four wards of Chicago followed, and then came the Ninth Presbyterian cadets in their natty sailor uniforms. With little Rhode Island in the lead, the original thirteen states were next in line, each personated by a pretty girl dressed in white, with broad sashes of ribbon floating from their shoulders. Their body guard was a company of miniature continental soldiers, uniformed in all the bravery of buff and blue and three-cornered hats with smart cockades. The main body of boys and girls followed. They were all Chicago public school children. Each state was known by the standard carried by a boy. The standard had the state shield on it, with its motto and date of entry. Back of them marched six girls shoulder to shoulder, with shields on which were the names of the principal cities of the state. Then came boys and girls representing the counties, the first row carrying corn, wheat, flowers, sugar cane, fruit, tobacco, cotton plants and something to designate the chief products of the state.

Parade at Night.

Down through a lane built up with people on either hand the night pageant wound its way around the grounds. In the midst of the illumination of the Court of Honor a fanfare of trumpets, the reflection of calcium lights on the Transportation building and distant cheering told of the coming of the parade. The plumes of the hussars marked either side of the avenue cut in the multitude. The troop of cavalry came on, and close on the heels of the horses a cordon of police, followed by a band. Then came the first of the floats which were to depict the history and the growth and development of Chicago. It was that of "The Genius of Music," a chorus of fifty young women, led by Prof. Katzenberger.

Then came the float which was to typify Chicago. The coat of arms of the nation and the state were placed on the front of the wagon, over which hovered an eagle with wings outstretched. A large globe surmounted the whole, on the pedestal of which were the grouped stands of the colors of the nation. A series of panels bore the dates of the great events in the history of the city. On the pedestal in front and at either hand of the figure "Chicago" stood the figures of love and liberty. "Chicago" was in an attitude of assent and gave the title of "I Will" to the float. Outriders and gaily caparisoned horses and pages in Grecian costumes led the way.

It was several minutes before the next float, "Chicago in 1812," came along with its representation of the bloody massacre. "Chicago in War," with the figures of Abraham Lincoln, Stephen A. Douglas, Richard Yates, Grant, Logan and Sheridan, was followed by "Chicago in Peace" and "Chicago Prostrate," representing the city after the deluge of fire. An old-time fire engine of 1861, manned by a volunteer crew, brought up the rear of the first section of the parade. After this followed a large number of floats presented by societies of foreigners residing in the city. All were magnificent productions.

The Fireworks.

The display of fireworks was perhaps the most magnificent ever witnessed. In addition to thousands of bombs and rockets fired from the lake shore in front of the Manufactures building there were cascades of fire in the grand basin, and a gorgeous representation of Niagara Falls from the Peristyle. Out in the lake a few hundred yards from the shore skirting Manufactures building were fired magnificent set pieces representing the "Burning of Chicago." The crackling lines of fire traced Chicago before the fire, with ships in the river, a bridge and Mrs. O'Leary's cow. The crowd applauded in one mighty shout and then the cow kicked over the lamp. Flames burst from the buildings, explosions shattered the bridges and vessels and the Chicago fire burned itself out before several hundred thousand satisfied spectators. "Old Fort Dearborn," the portrait of William B. Ogden, Chicago's first mayor, and "Chicago Welcoming the World" were subjects of other set pieces.

FREE OF DEBT.

The Bonded Indebtedness of the World's Fair Paid Off by a Check for $1,565,310.76 Drawn for That Purpose.

CHICAGO, Oct. 11.—Treasurer Seeberger and Auditor Ackerman celebrated Chicago day by making out a check for $1,565,310.76, payable to the Illinois trust and savings bank, trustee of the holders of exposition debenture bonds. The check will go to President J. J. Mitchell of the bank to-day, and will be used to settle the last cent of debt owed by the fair. Of the amount called for by the check $231,960.76 is for interest and $1,333,350 for the last installment of 30 per cent. due on the issue of $5,000,000 floated to insure the completion of the fair.

Two tons of silver and two wagon loads of greenbacks made Superintendent Horace Tucker, of the department of admissions, the happiest man in Chicago Monday night. Mr. Tucker's offices in the new service building occupy the whole upper floor. Numerous tables stand about the walls of the office. Ordinarily they are used by clerks in footing up admissions. They were put to a very different use Monday night.

To a poor man it looked like a Monte Cristo cave. Piled in stacks two feet high were silver quarters, halves, dimes and dollars. Nickels and pennies had their tables, but they were passed almost without notice. Greenbacks of almost all denominations, fringed one's, crisp twenty's, and even fat-looking fifty's were laid out in bundles until the onlooker ceased to regard them of any value. In such quantities currency sank to the level of groceries, or some ordinary commodity.

The Vigilant Easily Beats the Valkyr. in the Second of the Series of Yacht Races.

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—The second of the series of yacht races for America's cup took place on Monday, and again the American vessel, the Vigilant, defeated the Valkyrie, her English rival. The start was made at 11:25 a. m., and was nearly a perfect

one. The first turn of the triangular course of the 30 miles was made by the Vigilant in 1 hour, 6 minutes and 35 seconds, the Valkyrie being nearly five minutes behind. The second turn was made by the Vigilant in 1 hour, 56 minutes and 55 seconds; by the Valkyrie in 2 hours, 5 minutes and 52 seconds. The Vigilant finished, 10 minutes and 35 seconds ahead of the Valkyrie, her corrected time over the entire course being 3 hours, 25 minutes and 1 second; that of the Valkyrie being 3 hours, 35 minutes and 36 seconds.

The wind blew almost half a gale during the last half of the race and the boats came in with decks forward wet with spray. The next race will be Wednesday. It will be a beat to windward, 15 miles and return. Should the Vigilant win again the America's cup will remain here at least another year and the American centerboard will still be the champion yacht of the world.

HONORED IN DEATH.

Irishmen Pay Tribute to the Memory of Charles Stewart Parnell.

DUBLIN, Oct. 11.—Irishmen from all over the world on Sunday assembled around the grave of Charles Stewart Parnell in Glasnevin cemetery and did honer and reverence to the memory of the great Irish leader. It was the second anniversary of the death of the champion of home rule, and the crowds attending the ceremonies showed very clearly that Ireland has not forgotten the services of Parnell in the cause so dear to the hearts of her sons and daughters. The procession of mourners through the streets of Dublin far exceeded in number and in reverence that of last year upon the same occasion. The admirers of Parnell and the principles he represented took one and a half hours to pass the city hall.

The procession was headed by a black-draped wagon upon which were piled memorial wreaths sent from different parts of the country, as well as several from the United States, Canada and Australia. The independent Irish party of New York sent a handsome floral harp. It was 5 feet high, 3½ feet across and the top was made of green and gold immortelles, enlivened by red flowers of the same kind. The strings were of red immortelles, and across them in white flowers were the words: "Charles Stewart Parnell." Across the base of New York's tribute to the dead leader was the inscription: "In loving memorial; from the Irish of New York."

The officials and corporations of the cities of Dublin and Cork attended the ceremonies in state. The streets along the route to the cemetery were packed with men and women and the neighborhood of Glassnevin burial ground was crowded to the utmost. John Parnell, brother of the late Charles Stewart Parnell, and Mrs. Dickinson, his sister, appeared in the parade in a carriage, accompanied by John Redmond, M. P., the Parnellite leader.

At the cemetery the wreaths were placed upon the grave of the beloved statesman. The procession then reformed and returned to the city, the streets being lined with thousands of persons, while every window along the route was filled with persons who displayed mourning emblems.

Disastrous Fire.

WATERLOO, Ia., Oct. 11.—Fire started Monday morning in the business portion of the town of Parkersburg, 25 miles west of this city. The town has no fire protection and the fire was soon beyond control. Waterloo sent help, which succeeded in getting the flames under control after twenty-six business houses were destroyed. The buildings that were destroyed were mostly frame structures, though there were three or four brick blocks among them. The loss is estimated at about $175,000, with insurance from $50,000 to $75,000.

Street Car Held Up at Des Moines.

DES MOINES, Ia., Oct. 11.—Two highwaymen succeeded in holding up a street car on the Ingersoll avenue line late Sunday night within the city limits. The motor man and conductor and two passengers were robbed of all they had, about $200. During the same night highwaymen held up persons in six or seven different places, obtaining various amounts.

Shot and Killed a Rival.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Oct. 11.—Henry Boysinger shot and killed Levi Orrichs, a rival horse trader, at a mining town near this city. Boysinger is in jail

Hood's Sarsaparilla Restored Health

"I have been a very great sufferer from scrofula. First, a large bunch came in my neck, growing as big as a good sized apple. The doctor lanced it, and we succeeded in healing it up, but the disease began to appear in my face, which would swell up and affect my eyes. Every morning they were so inflamed and swollen that I was blind. I was in this condition for about a year. I began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and when I had used a bottle and a half, the swelling in my face had entirely gone down.

MAY.

May was fifteen when 'er daddy
  Sent 'er to a city school,
'N we all rode to ther landin',
  Me upon ther ole gray mule.
When de rest 'ad hugged an' k'ssed 'er
  I jes' whispered fierce an' low:
Swar you'll stick ter me fo'ever."
  And she sobbed: "Forever, Joe."

In ther lonesome times to follow
  Life warn't wuth the livin' fer;
An' ther wasn't nothin' 'cep'n,
  Jes' to work an' think o' her.
Spec I did some growin' mebby,
  While ther days was draggin' by,
'N I know it when my breeches
  Got to crawlin' up so high.

Then they told me she was finished,
  Gradiated, so they said,
'N wuz comin' home. Jemimy!
  I was mos' upon my head.
'N we all went to ther landin'.
  Gee! But when I heerd that boat
All my knees was weak ez water
  'N my heart was in my throat.

Then it stopped, an' cross ther gangway
  Danced a little city miss,
In er man's straw hat an' 'spenders
  'N men's cuffs upon her wrists,
But I stared on, far behind her,
  "Could May disappint us so?"
When ther lady stepped up laughin'
  Sayin': "Don't you know me, Joe?"

Well! At home it warn't no better,
  All her close an' ways was strange,
Yet I knowed 'twas May, an' couldn't
  Pint ther reason of ther change.
'N I mooned aroun' in misery
  Till one cloudy summer day
By ther creek I burst out: "Tell me
  What's you done with little May?"

"Stay right here," she kinder panted
  An' a-wonderin' thar I stood,
Till I seen my weetheart comin'—
  Comin' barefoot through the wood.
Cotton dress an' pink sunbonnet,
  Hair a-streamin', wild an' free,
An' she whispered as I grabbed her:
  "Now do you believe it's me?"

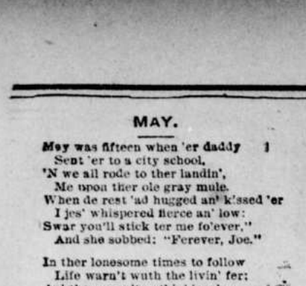
A STEPMOTHER.

By L. M. Weston.



[Copyright, 1893, by the Author.]

"IT is disgraceful!" cried Gertrude Foster, passionately.

"That is a fact," returned her brother, coolly, "but what are you going to do about it?"

The young man was lying in a hammock, swung at the end of the piazza; his sister was seated near him, in a rocking-chair, which she kept in vigorous motion, as though thereby trying to accentuate her remarks concerning the letter she held in her hand.

A boy, about sixteen years of age, was lounging on the steps, with a novel before him, but the contents of that epistle had apparently taken away his interest in the story, for he was not reading.

"You surely are not surprised, Gertrude," continued the occupant of the hammock. "I have been noticing for some time the care father took in his toilet, when he went out on business. Business!" laughing derisively; "my stern parent never fooled me much. I thought he was going a-wooing."

"But an old maid, Jim!" said his sister. "A woman probably full of freaks and fancies. It is all very well for you and Harold, but I have to be with her, at home, all the time."

"Only three months, my dear," returned Jim. "Remember my future brother-in-law comes home to-day, and that you will soon be a blushing bride. Rather a bad day for his return, though," he added, looking over the hammock at the landscape before him, half hidden by the heavy veil of rain. "I do not think I ever knew it to pour harder."

"Yes," assented Gertrude, meditatively. "That is my one consolation. If it were not for Dick, I would go out and hunt for the position of a governess to-morrow—"
